Seen On King Street During The Week

Teddy Nattress going along the street in his shirt sleeves last Friday, and you know how cold it was that day. It beats all what these young guys will do just to get their name in "Seen on King Street".

Coloured lights strung across the street but not yet turned on in all their glory. Waiting, maybe, to make sure Christmas is really coming before they get the "juice," or is it going to be one of the surprises on Saturday when Santa Claus comes to town with his big parade?

Cliff Scott and Talbert Kelllett clearing the side of the street of slush, the water could get away. We noticed Homer Ouellette taking a big interest in the proceedings. But he was wishing he could get in the act too.

Many suitable gifts for the Christmas buyers in the local store windows. If these are any indication of what's inside, no need to go far afield to do this pleasant chore.

Many of the windows decorated for Christmas with a powder of some kind sprayed on. At first it was thought by our watchful eye that someone was trying to revive Halloween.

but closer scrutiny revealed the Christmas Spirit, not the devil spirit.

With two huge truck loads of Christmas trees parked on the street opposite each other, it looked from a distance like the entrance to the Ganaraska reforestation area.

MAILED IN A HURRY
Rush, before the Christmas mail gums up the postal machinery must have been the slogan of a Toronto firm. They sent us an envelope first-class mail with no contents in it, showing they really got in a hurry to get their missive off and avoid the Christmas rush.
