LONDON A CATS' ELYSIUM. You Can Tell It by the Cats You Mec. in the Street.

A lover of cats once said that he summed up the general character of the inhabitants of a city by the way the stray cats received his overtures of friendship.

In Paris the cat literally walks alone, as Kipling prophesied it always would. It is impossible to get near enough to one to stroke it. French cats are only seen darting fron one alley to another, and apparently always in a state of panic. This arises from the fact that the French are not lovers of animals. In London it is quite different. London is an elysium for cats. The cats heart.
