FOR RAZOR USERS A razor is one of the most necessary own barter. Therefore, a good razor is a thing to long for, and, when procured, to cherish. It is a notable fact that a good razor can only be known after using it for some time. An expert has said that it is practically impossible to tell the quality of a blade by looking at it. A razor costing seventy-five cents may turn out to be a better article than one at four times the price. In stropping a razor, the blade should be drawn across the strop from the heel to the point, at the same time going the full length of the slrop. 'n shaving, this motion should be reversed, the blade travelling from point to heel. The reason of his is that the edge of the blade has tiny, saw-teeth, and the opposite movements use these to the best advantage.

They had, however, all but given up hope when they were rescued, on November 16th, by the exploring ship, Hinemon which brought them in due course New Zealand. Considered simply as a feat of durance, their exploit is regarded by old navigators in these waters as little short of marvellous. Four to five months is generally considered as about the limit during which castaways can exist under such circumstances in these latitudes. Indeed, the crew of eleven men belonging to the Norwegian ship, Karl, which was wrecked on this very same group in April, 1883, were a found dead of starvation and exposure within less than nine weeks afterwards Sailors cast away on uninhabited islands in more temperate regions, however, have managed to subsist for much
