January. 28th .is the Fatal Date in History.

DEATH DAY OF KINGS.

Jan. 28th seems to have been a death day of great monarchs, for on that date in 814 died Charlemagne, King of France and Emperor of Germany, the greatest of the Frankish Kings and the first Teuton on whom the dignity of Roman Emperor was conferred. He was a religlious and patriotic man, affectionate to his family, and having a very high conception of his public duty.

On the same date, in 1547, died our "Bluff King Hal," whose character has been variously estimated, according to the reading of the events of the period given by the different historians; but, under any view, he was a man of vigorous intellect, strong passion, and immense force of will. Completely breaking from Rome, Henry became "Protector and Supreme Head of the Church and Clergy of England"; while during his reign Wales was incorporated with England, and Ireland raised from a loruship to a kingdom.

Another monarch who died on this date was Abbas the Great, of Persia, who died in 1628-a monarch whose fame spread over Europe. On this day, in 1725, also, died Peter the Great—the first monarch who took the title of "Emperor of All the Russias." He abolished the patriarchal dignity, to curb the clergy, and established the "Holy Administrative Synod," of which he was the head. His great reforms also extended to all departments of the state, for which mighty task he had only his own unconquerable genius and energy
