Liners converse with each other by wireless many miles apart in mid-Atlantic, and erpoel to Sandy Hook, receiving daily all the current news from both shores. Thus the fear of disaster is lessened, for assistance may be summoned from consideratble distances, while the facilities for social and business intercourse are immeasurably increased.

Electricity, indeed, has worked wonders in the development of the ocean greyhound. Lifeboats are now raised and lowered by electric-power; electric motors heave the sounding line, hoist the passenger lifts, and drive all the auxiliary machinery in the stokholds, Music is said to have charms to soothe bakery, galley, pantry and refrigerating-rooms. Electricity lights and venticalculated to render the peaceful breast lates the ship, works the searchlights and signaling apparatus, conveys stores, mails and baggage and closes the watertight doors, while even the siren is subject to its control. And the decorative setting of all these luxuries is superb. Smokerooms and drawing-rooms are garnished and upholstered like West End mansions; famous artists have designed and executed the mural adornments; the magnificent sitting and sleeping-rooms, musicrooms and saloons are furnished with Louis XV suites, Sheraton couches and tapestried walls. There is $10,000,000 worth of comfort and splendor on nearly every liner afloat. And the Hamburg-American liner, envious of the Lusitania, has promised to "go one better" than all this!
