FATTENING TURKEYS.
At the price given per pound for turkeys these last few years it pays to feed them to good weight; a couple of pounds more on the weight counts, but four or more pounds count larger. I put in new blood at good prices each year, and make special prices by sales of breeders. After I have called in my orders for breeding stock from the farmers about me, I go over my flocks and make selections of my best hens and gobblers, after which these are marked and as far as it is possible are kept apart from the main flock, and not fed so heavily as the birds for the Thanksgiving market. After losing several of my best turkeys one year from feeding green corn, I shut off that given raw, although I use it in plenty when cooked. I do not begin feeding heavy until pretty well along in October, and then, each morning, new corn, shelled or sometimes cut in small pieces, is placed in a large outdoor kettle and boiled several hours. By night this is cooled and ready for their supper. I have never known cooked corn to hurt them. For morning they get a ration of ground oats, boiled vegetables, corn meal mixed either with milk or water. Always they have grit and charcoal near their feed troughs. At noon they get old corn, and sometimes wheat, with an occasional feed of suet.—Ex.
