Tells of Sunny Southern Alberta After Six Years in the Province

Mr. S. Dunbar, who has recently returned from Sunny Alberta, has given the Post his impressions of that section of the Great West in the following interesting article:—

"Sunny Southern Alberta." This was the sesame which drew me westward six years ago. I had spent several winters in the cold of New Ontario, and had heard the old maxim, "Go West, young man, go West." Determined to see this west, I went to Winnipeg.

While there I chanced on a Northwestern paper teeming with advertisements of Sunny Southern Alberta, so that I got to thinking, or rather dreaming of a banana belt in Canada. Dreams led to action, and likewise a ticket to Medicine Hat, a city on the main line of the C. P. Ry, east of Calgary. The name, Medicine Hat, is what attracted me, as well as the description I had of it. I believe it was Rudyard Kipling who described it as having "All Hell for a Basement," presumably on account of the vast pressure of natural gas found there.

I had not travelled many miles over the prairie before I began to realize a something in the west which did not obtain in the east and which I could not then describe. Passing Manitoba into Saskatchewan, I found the difference increasing. The chance travellers who got on and off the cars all had a hurry and movement different entirely from the east, and I began to get acquainted with that "get" of which our neighbors to the south of us are known for the world over, in fact everything and everyone was "going some." In due time I arrived at Medicine Hat. It was night when I left the train, and what struck me most was how well the city was lighted, and I might mention here that the lights were let burn night and day, as it was cheaper than turning them out mornings and relighting them nights.

The next day was spent in seeing the town. I had expected to see a wonderful country, but from the Hat there was nothing to see but cut banks on all sides. All trains leaving the Hat need two engines to haul them out. An idea of the location of Medicine Hat is obtained by inverting an ordinary straw hat, putting the city down in the crown, the brim representing the prairie or bench lands below. On the map it is shown on the Saskatchewan River just west of the dividing line between Saskatchewan and Alberta, and some 60 miles from the 49th parallel and the State of Montana.

It was here that the Buffalo and Indian roamed at will, to be followed by the cattle ranchers with their large herds of cattle, tended by the real wild and woolly cow punchers, of whom a few remain even today, although not so wild or picturesque. The sway of the rancher is falling before the steady rush of the homesteader. To me it seems a pity that the homesteader has been allowed to locate in this part of the Great Northwest, where there is so little rainfall, the average yearly fall being around 17 inches, including melting of snow, and where to farm successfully capital is needed, and a man must be a good farmer, and a scientific farmer, to make a living that is worth while. Dry farming is the only farming that can pay, and dry farming means, first and last, good farming and scientific farming.

It is here that the rancher should have been allowed to reign at least until all the other thousands of acres were taken up. The best grass of all the prairies, for grazing purposes grows here. Very few winters are there, that the cattle and horses cannot pick a living, and come out fat in the spring, and if this had been the case, the West would not have had to face the question of beef supply, which it will have to face very soon. The supply would always have been more than enough for home consumption, and beef would not have reached the famine prices of from 28c to 35c. for steak.

At Medicine Hat there was a camp at the time of the rebellion, and many of the older heads can recall stirring events of those times.

The first question asked me is, "How do you like the West?" and I invariably answer "Fine." To those who want money, go west, and those who are satisfied to go through life with all the comforts of home, and a reasonably good time, stay in good old Ontario.

In the West money talks, and everyone talks "money," and good and loud at that. Get it honest if you can, but get it anyway. Real estate and money are the principal topics of talk with nine-tenths of the people nine-tenths of the time, and most of Sunday.

In most any village, town or city there are subdivisions from 2 to 10 miles from the post office, and this point always recalls to me a tale of an energetic realty dealer of that Last Best West. A farmer went to town and was attracted by a subdivision announcement in the office window of a real estate agent, and went in to make enquiries of the agent. The agent, who always has an automobile, persuaded the farmer to go out in the car and see the lots. After a few miles run they reached the subdivision. After looking around the real estate agent suggested seeing the farmer's place, as they were on the road. The farmer pointing over his shoulder towards town said, "I guess we'll have to go back two or three miles. We passed it on the way out."

Coal is very plentiful around the Hat, but that is only of secondary importance as compared with the natural gas. There are some wells in and around the Hat, which can furnish 6,000,000 cubic feet of gas per 24 hours. From Bow Island, a few miles distant, it is said a flow of 11,000,000 cubic feet per 24 hours can be obtained. It is from here that a company is piping gas to supply the city of Calgary, a distance of nearly 200 miles, and there is a proposal now

- Woodville—Wm. McKee.

The first business of importance was the election of a Warden.

The first stood Robertson 5, Devitt 4, Southern 3, and Mulligan, Varcoe and Bottum 2, and Fee 1. On the second round Bottum was 6 and Robertson 4, the others securing 2, while on the last vote Reeve Bottum obtained the necessary 10 and was elected.

Major E. H. Hopkins was called upon to witness the oath of office. Warden Bottum read and affirmed to, and a speech was demanded.

In part the Warden spoke—"I wish to express my gratitude for being elected to this high office and assure you all that as I have taken my oath I will do my best to properly fill the position. I trust my weakness will be strengthened that I may do all in my power connected with this office. Upon my arrival in town I heard my name mentioned as Warden, but I did not imagine that I would actually be elected over so many excellent and capable men. I hope all the meetings will be pleasant besides being business like and useful.

"Last year there was a new gown for the Warden and this year there is a new Bottum for the chair."

Moving Trees in the Park

Seven maple trees in Victoria Park will have to be removed in order to make room for the new armory. Warren at last night's council meeting suggested that the chairman of the Town Property have them removed during the winter, and place the some other part of the park. It would be a pity, he thought, to lose the trees which could be saved by being moved in the winter. Deputy Reeve Dobson will attend the matter.
