Joseph Torrance's Body Found Near Where He Was Drowned

Fenelon Falls Young Man, Victim of Sad Accident Interred To-day—
Identification Only by Clothes.

(Special to The Evening Post)
Fenelon Falls, May 27.—The body of Joseph Torrance, the victim of the recent drowning accident here, was found floating down the river opposite Mr. Hand's boat house on Tuesday afternoon. Mr. Norman Torrance, brother of the deceased, who has been almost constantly watching ever since the accident was the first to make the discovery. He immediately sent a messenger to Mr. Fred Metcalfe, a neighbor, and together they towed the body down to Mr. E. Glaspell's boat house, where it was kept until some of the officials of the village, who had been notified came and took it into the boat house. As it is twenty-four days since the accident occurred the deceased could only be recognized by the clothing worn. It is supposed the body has been under a ledge of rock or log which has hitherto prevented it from rising to the surface. The funeral took place from the family residence on Francis-st. this morning.

GLENARM.
Gardening, house cleaning, and making "merry widow hats" is the order of the day among the women, while the men are so busily engaged with seedling and planting that they have no time to think of the latest style in "stiff hats."
Our cemetery presents a pleasing appearance just at present. The ministry to the dead is a sacred one. We hope to see the grass kept short and green. We cannot but reflect however on the amount of money spent on grand caskets and handsome monuments. Let us show our respect for the dead by all means but first let us brighten the lives of those about us while they can appreciate it.
Mr. Birch of Gloucester, England, spent the week end visiting his son Gough, at Glenarm.
