

DEFEATING THE MOUNTED POLICE

A supposedly insane homesteader for three days was the center figure in a drama which for sensational features is unequalled in the history of Western Canada.

The man, badly wounded, was captured, he caused the death of Detective Bailey, a plain clothes policeman connected with the Edmonton detachment, and the killing of two other officers of the mounted police.

At 3 o'clock on the morning of April 25th, Mike Rechie, a Russian homesteader, living three miles from the 'Fonbergs' shack, was awakened by a feeble knocking at his door. He rose and was startled as he saw the shadow of a man in the gloom of the half opened doorway and the next minute heard the newcomer fall.

His clothes, tattered and torn, leaving one knee entirely bare from a long crawl through rough underbrush, Fonberg lay utterly exhausted at the door of the Russian homesteader's shack. One arm had been smashed with a bullet from the attacking party, and another had penetrated underneath his left armpit, passing clear through the outer wall of the chest. Yet badly wounded as he had been, and with the blood flowing fast from two bullet wounds, the man had crept through a cordon of armed men, some of whom at one time or another must have been within a few yards of him, showing him to be a master hand in the art of wood craft. And even hurt as he was he dragged his rifle with him.

All unknown of the great fight which had taken place so close to him, the Russian, Rechie, took the man in and revived him with brandy and roughly dressed the wounds. Fonberg quickly recovered some of his almost spent strength and requested to be driven to Chipman, a small way station on the Canadian Northern Railway, about forty miles across country from Toftield and fifteen miles from the scene of the fight. Fonberg paid the man five dollars, and in the early dawn they started out in a team drawn buggy.

They were jogging along within three miles of Chipman, when they were met by Constable McPhail of the R.N.W.M.P., and a newspaper man from the staff of the Edmonton Bulletin, who were on their way to join the searching posse. The boy who was driving the Mounted Policeman and the newspaperman recognized Fonberg as the two rigs approached each other.

Slouched far down in the seat, and almost unconscious, the outlaw who a short few hours ago had given battle to a whole squad of police, was no longer terrible. His life, which he had carried painfully across the miles of prairie before he reached the Russian's shack, had been left behind there, and he was easily taken by McPhail and his companion, and the rigs returned to Chipman.

Lying on a cot in the rotunda of the Chipman hotel, Oscar Fonberg, the murderer of Detective Bailey, and the terror of the district for months, gave little of the appearance of a man who has created probably the most exciting scene that has marked the history of the Mounted Police in Western Alberta in the many years since the passing of the old time whiskey runners and cattle thieves. Lying there, his long, unkempt light brown hair falling over a full forehead, he was the cynosure of all eyes, and all the villagers kept crowding in to look at the man who had made such a desperate fight. Except for his small, stubby nose, which is altogether out of proportion with the rest of his massive features, the man had not an unpleasing appearance and looked anything the part of a figure which, in a small way, stood out for a few short days almost as commandingly as the famous Harry Tracy in his record breaking long distance run from the posses of a score of counties.

Fonberg was later removed to the barracks at Fort Saskatchewan, and will, within the next few weeks, come up for trial on the charge of the murder of Detective Bailey.

Not since Almighty Voice made his sensational stand in a poplar bluff near Prince Albert against a whole posse of Mounted Police, has there been such a melodrama as this of the man in the shack near Toftield, Alberta. Almighty Voice was dead when they found him, after shelling the bluff with a machine gun. Fonberg the maniac escaped with his life. And among all the weird outlaw characters that have made Fort Saskatchewan one of the most interesting of all police posts, country was made, but without avail.

Meanwhile, through the wide publicity given the case, it came to light through the manager of the Anderson brickyard in Edmonton, that Swan Fonberg, one of the owners of the Ross Creek ranch, was working for him, and that the fight given the police in the shack had been the work of only one man, Oscar Fonberg. What gave rise to the belief that two men were in the dug-out was the rapid and perfect hail of bullets which greeted the first rush of the Mounted Police. Swan Fonberg, an ignorant and evidently half witted person, was kept under surveillance by the police and no word of the battle was allowed to reach him.

At 3 o'clock on the morning of April 25th, Mike Rechie, a Russian homesteader, living three miles from the 'Fonbergs' shack, was awakened by a feeble knocking at his door. He rose and was startled as he saw the shadow of a man in the gloom of the half opened doorway and the next minute heard the newcomer fall.

And among all the weird outlaw characters that have made Fort Saskatchewan one of the most interesting of all police posts, Fonberg is surely one of the strangest. He is the victim of a single fixed idea such as helped to make a "lonely" of many a man that lost his reason in the solitude and had to be taken in tow by the police.

A New Horse for Lindsay

THE IMPORTED CLYDESDALE STALLION

Golden Bloom

(14145), [12233]

MR. SAM ENDICOTT has purchased another horse, Golden Bloom, to add to his stable of well known horses.

Will stand for Mares during the Season of 1913 as follows:

TUESDAY MORNING—Will leave his own stable, Lot 26, Con. 6, Ops, and proceed to Thos. Endicott's, Pleasant Point, for noon. To John C. Thurston's Dunford, for night.

WEDNESDAY—John McMullen's for noon. Robt. Padgett's 13th Emily for night.

THURSDAY morning will return to his own stables, and remain until Saturday morning. To John Maunders' hotel until night, thence back to his own stable until Tuesday morning.

The above route will be continued throughout the season, health and weather permitting.

Pedigree and Description of Golden Bloom

GOLDEN BLOOM (14145), (12233), is a beautiful bay, with white face, and white hind legs, foaled 9th May, 1907, bred by William Hood, Chapeltown, Berke, Kirkcubright, Scotland, imported April, 1911, by Adam Schraff, Cummings' Bridge, Ont. Golden Bloom's 1st sire was Baron Hood (imp) (8489), (11260); his G sire was Baron's Pride (9122), (3067); G. G. sire Macpherson (3225); G. G. G. sire Prince of Wales (673); G. G. G. G. sire Prince Lord Lyon (934); G. G. G. G. G. sire Alfred (619); all of above Sires are too well known to need comment regarding their quality in the horse world, and the following list of dams through which Golden Bloom was produced, will show conclusively that he comes from first-class stock, with records that cannot be excelled. His dam was the celebrated Madge of Chapeltown (15091), (12937); G. Dam Duchess of Chapeltown (12181); G. G. Dam, Princess (6269); G. G. G. Dam Jean of Foreside (2790).

TERMS—To insure a foal $12, payable 1st February, 1914. $1 off for prompt payment. Insured mares must be returned regularly to the horse or they will be charged insurance whether in foal or not. Persons trying their mares and not returning them to the horse will be charged and persons disposing of their mares before foaling time must furnish proof or they will be charged insurance whether in foal or not. All accidents to mares at the risk of owners. Colts remain the property of the owner of horse until paid for.

Mr. Endicott's, McInnis 3967, has a very creditable record also, his colts in 1910 getting second in a bunch of seven at Lindsay Fair. In 1911 at the Winter Fair his colts won 1st in a bunch of 9, and in 1912 at the Fall Fair won 1st in 3 yr olds and 2nd in 2 yr olds.

McInnis will go the same route this year and the charge will be nine dollars.
