It appears that three young men who intended taking a canoe trip north, were camped for the day at Dbiel's Point. While enjoying a paddle on the lake their canoe capsized, throwing the occupants into the water. Two of the number being unable to swim, and realizing their danger called loudly for help. A launch passing at about the same moment caused their cries to pass unnoticed. After being for some time in the water they at length succeeded in attracting the attention of those on shore. Dr. Grattan Graham and Mr. Arthur Robson also Mr. W. Pogue went to their rescue, and not a minute too soon, as they were in a decidedly perilous plight, two of the number being almost on the verge of collapse from exhaustion and fright. The party was taken up to Dr. Graham's cottage where restoratives were applied, and after some time they recovered from the effect of the accident. The youngest of the party being a swimmer was in comparatively little danger, and escaped practically none the worse for the experience.

power users at Peterboro, who some of it is needed for navigation. It is all very well for those responsible to cruise on the Bassie river from the falls to the Trent water putter, with a galaxy of inspectors on inspection jaunts and open cement wharves for private interests. There is a whole lot of work to be done on the Trent water and Lindsay wants its share. Those who are entrusted with the work are not big enough for the job, they should make an inspection exit. The people's money is contributed for the upkeep and maintenance of this waterway, and heaven's sake give them something for it, besides promises and speculations. (Continued from page 1.)
