Owes Cure to Zam-Buk

Prominent Manager's Telling Testimony

Mr. D. R. Gourlay, advertising manager for the well known piano firm of Gourlay, Winter & Leeming, Toronto and Winnipeg, is amongst the prominent men and women who testify to Zam-Buk's great curative power. He writes to the company as follows:

"Gentlemen, - I have pleasure in stating that upon the recommendation of a relative I purchased a box of your remedy (Zam-Buk) and by a few applications entirely cured a very severe sprain of the back. While not given to indiscriminate use of, or belief in, patent medicines, I can conscientiously recommend Zam-Buk."

Sincerely yours,
(Signed) D. R. Gourlay.
This is just why Zam-Buk proves its superiority! It is treated by me as a woman who has tried it as an altogether different to ordinary preparations. Doctors, hospital nurses, matrons of convalescent homes - all give Zam-Buk a good word, and better still, they use it. Zam-Buk is as good for muscular stiffness, sprains, rheumatism, and sciatica as it is for skin troubles. Hockey players and athletes in general find it invaluable. For eruptions, pustules, scalp sores, itch, eczema, ulcers, boils, abscesses, blood poison, cuts, burns, bruises and abrasions, it is a speedy cure. Takes the soreness out of wounds almost instantly, and kills all disease germs, thus preventing festering and inflammation. All druggists and stores sell at 50c a box, on post free from the Zam-Buk Co., Toronto for price, 10 boxes for $2.50. Send 1c. stamp for trial box.

That Championship

Local base ball fans would like to know what is going to be done about the Wideawakes-Bankers game. As yet the officials have made no statement regarding the game, and the people who are interested are still waiting to hear the result.

Typewriting by Wireless

The office clerk of the future will, perhaps, have his typewriter under a glass case, and from time to time the tap-tap of the machine will be heard, actuated by invisible means and producing typewritten letters dictated by another office hundreds of miles away," says the London Mail. "Such an apparently impossible state of affairs has been shown to be within reach by the demonstration which took place at the Hotel Cecil, when Hans Knudson, a Danish electrical engineer, gave proof of his power to make a typewriter work by means of wireless telegraphy from an office situated any distance away from it. Not only can a typewriter be operated, but a linotype composing machine; and although the machines demonstrated with are in a more or less experimental stage they nevertheless work with sufficient accuracy to justify the vista of almost magic writing opened up by the Danish inventor's claims.

"Yet the method is exceedingly simple when one sees it and understands its basis. As each letter is tapped on the sending typewriter, a metal pin is forced up through a hole. Thus in typing a word of five letters five such pins would be forced up in their respective positions. Over these projecting pins a metal band travels, which comes in contact with them one by one, and as each contact is made an electric wave is started off from the antennae of the wireless apparatus.

"The machine, which receives the wireless message, and translates it into typewriting, is fitted with an endless metal band travelling at the same rate and in perfect unison with that in the transmitting instrument. Whenever a wave is sent out by the latter it is received by this band, and the band actuates an electromagnet connected with the corresponding letter, which is tapped by a typewriter placed in electrical communication."

Rubber Paved Streets

When Sir Henry A. Blake declared open the International Rubber Exhibition at Olympia, London, he had around him in the great building - according to an expert computation - nearly 1,000,000 pounds worth of pure rubber.

"Rubber," declared Sir Henry, "is a product that has during the past half century played a greater part than any other substance in expediting human progress." As proof of this statement, he added: "Without rubber no cables could have been laid to give the means of that instantaneous communication which makes for peace, friendship and commerce."

"If rubber sank in price to 2s. a pound," observed a prominent exhibitor, "its scope might be further extended by using it to pave the streets of London." This remark conjures up visions of a silent London. With streets paved with rubber instead of with wood blocks, or macadam, or stone sets, and with gines, traffic would be almost quiet."

President for Life

Springfield Republican; In the constitutional convention of 1787, the proposal had considerable support that the president of the United States be elected to hold office during good behavior. But it was objected that there could never be any certainty of what constituted bad behavior to justify ejection from office, and the result would be an inviolable life tenure, ending in monarchy. This was sufficient to shelve the good behavior proposal. The founders of the government could easily see the possibility of a president who would so lower the dignity of the office and subvert it to partisan ends, as to outrage the national sense of what is proper, without going quite far enough to support impeachment charges of "high crimes and misdemeanors." So a short and definite elective term was finally agreed upon by which the people could protect themselves in a measure against all such contingencies; but even this cannot, of course, avail against temporary embarrassments of the kind.

"My heart is in my mouth. I am afraid to hear your answer." "You may well be, Mr. Dollboy," retorted Ethel. "I never could marry a man whose heart was not in the right place."

Lord Houghton's sister was often annoyed at her brother's indiscriminate hospitality. "Do you remember, my dear," he asked her at dinner one day, "whether that famous scoundrel was hanged or acquitted?"

"He must have been hanged, or you would have had him to dinner long ago," replied the lady.

The Elections in West Peterborough

Remarkable Enthusiasm Exhibited in the Election of Hon. J. R. Stratton

The news of the election of Mr. J. R. Stratton in West Peterboro was received with genuine satisfaction by his many friends in Lindsay. A representative of The Post was in the electric city on Monday and states that the excitement there was at fever heat. Both sides worked energetically, but early in the afternoon the Conservatives threw up the sponge and admitted the defeat of Mr. Burnham.

When the returns were announced from the city, and it was found that Mr. Stratton had carried it, the scene was indescribable. The climax came, however, when the results from the townships were thrown on the canvas. The people swarmed the streets in thousands, cheering wildly. The parade in the evening was a grand sight, the discharge of fireworks illuminating the heavens and adding a brilliancy to the festivities. During the evening Mr. Stratton was deluged with congratulations from the leading public men of Canada.

The American Member

There was something more than pleasant in the jocular characterization of Sir John Henry Puleston, whose death was announced on Monday, as the American member of the British House of Commons. Sir John who died on the verge of four-score, spent his early manhood in the United States. For a time he earned a living in Scranton and elsewhere in Pennsylvania as a newspaper reporter, the entrance thus given him into public life leading to an acquaintance and then to friendship, with Mr. Lincoln, then a candidate for the presidency, which continued while Mr. Lincoln was president.

When he returned to England Mr. Puleston (as he was then) introduced there business methods he had learned in this country, and very soon became potent in great enterprises requiring skilful financing. Puleston's acquaintance with America, its resources and its people, enabled him to inspire English investors with confidence in American securities. And it should be noted that he bravely stood by his American commitments in the face of such discouraging incidents as the collapse, about thirty years ago, of the Central Railroad Company of New Jersey, in which many millions of dollars of British capital were invested. His manful and convincing arguments helped to make practicable the reorganization of that company's affairs, at a time of gloom and depression still shadowed by the great panic of 1873.

To Much Corn Juice

A young farm laborer from O's who came in on Monday evening to hear the election returns, was invited by friends to imbibe in corn juice at their boarding quarters. He left for home late in the evening and must have fallen asleep in his buggy as he was found "dead to the world" about one o'clock this morning on the Little B. in road. He had fallen out of the buggy and his horse was found at his employer's gate waiting the return of its driver.

On a Bear Hunt

Three young hunters from O's township started out Monday in search of the bear seen near Clabo station of Saturday. They were unsuccessful in their hunt, although they state they found sufficient evidence of the fact that Mr. Bruin was in the township somewhere.

A Municipal Theatre

The first municipal, uncommercial theatre in America - an endowed institution - is in successful operation in Red Wing, Minn. Red Wing is a town of only ten thousand persons, forty miles down the Mississippi River from St. Paul, and to it several years ago a citizen left $80,000 to found a municipal theatre. A citizens' committee, under the terms of the bequest, manages the playhouse, and so well has it done its work that for the last three years a dividend on the capital interested has been paid to the town. Professor Richard Burton, in a lecture on the drama, using the Red Wing experiment as a criterion, predicts that "in ten years probably and in twenty-five years certainly, every considerable city in the United States will have its municipal theatre."

Waste Products

Prof. Bonnycastle Dale, a scientist of the Pacific Coast, has, says the N. Y. Post, made a strong bid for either fame or infamy by his suggestion contained in a serious magazine article that the seaweeds that grow in such profusion along every coast supply inexhaustible quantities of ideal raw materials for digestible and nutritious breakfast foods. That the hint will, sooner or later, be acted upon by some enterprising manufacturer, can hardly be doubted, and it is within the bounds of reasonable expectation that we shall soon see "Shredded Seaweed," "Flaked Fucias," "Dessicated Dulse," "Predigested Sargassum," "Puffed Nereocystis," "Malto-Kelp," "Cream of Sea Moss," and a score more marine substitutes for hot cakes and maple syrup, done up in one-pound packages, "guaranteed under the Pure Food Laws," and crammed down the throats of a long-suffering and surfeited people.

It is just ten years since Sir William Crookes, president of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, presented his alarming array of statistics, proving that by the year 1928 the entire population of the globe would be face to face with starvation, or at best half-rations, for the reason that the production of wheat could not possibly keep pace with the progressive increase in the world's population. Sir William failed to take into consideration the neglected and ungathered harvests of the seas. In the great Sargasso Sea alone, in the North Atlantic Ocean, sufficient nutritious vegetation flourishes and decays to support the entire population of Europe, if it were harvested and prepared in a manner fitting it for human consumption. On the sea beaches of the United States, enough protoids are cast up by the waves, and allowed to decay and desiccate into their original elements, to take the place of the whole product of the North-Western wheat fields. If the world's teeming millions ever face wholesale hunger, it will not be on account of any niggardliness of nature, or any shortsightedness of Providence, but because mankind lacks the wit to utilize the food materials that exist in superabundance.

Of course, there is nothing new in the idea of eating seaweeds. They have been eaten and enjoyed for unaccounted centuries. Many varieties are nearly pure gelatine. These have been eaten for ages by the Chinese, Japanese, and Sandwich Islanders. Thousands of Japanese coast dwellers gather a sufficient quantity of seaweed in July, August, and September to last them until the next season's harvest. The people go out to the marine harvest fields in row-boats, armed with long poles, to the end of each one of which a hook is attached. With these queer implements of war they tear the seaweeds loose from the submerged rocks, and take them ashore, and spread them out to dry in the sun. They are taken to local factories, boiled, shredded, and prepared for food. A cleaner and more wholesome article of diet cannot be imagined, and travelers who have tasted it say that the taste is pleasant. As a base for cheap candy, preserves, jellies, and puddings it is infinitely superior to materials of ten used.

Lipton Limited

Over 3,000 depositors have taken advantage of a new system of banking which Lipton Limited, have just introduced at 420 of their branches in the United Kingdom.

Accounts may be opened by anybody irrespective of age for amounts of three pence and upwards. There is no limit to the amount of the account, and interest is allowed at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum. This, however, may be altered by giving one month's notice; while depositors have to give three days' notice for withdrawals.

If anyone in the household is obliged to take calomel as a medicine, they should be careful not to take any salt after it (common salt), as the combination of the two forms corrosive sublimate, which is a deadly poison.

Sheets, pillow cases, towels, tablecloths—all folded linens—should be laid upon the shelves ends toward the wall, the round folds outward. The effect is neater to the eye, and articles are more easily taken out.

There's Danger There!

The old adage "A stitch in time saves nine" applies to the human system. Nature gives her timely warning, and if heeded much suffering may be prevented, but if neglected she demands a very heavy penalty.
