A DAY IN OCTOBER

St. Catharines Journal
The crisp and yellow leaves lie on the grass and decaying ferns, when the golden sunbeams flit over them, chasing the long shadows from nook and corner, and when the sun is in the smoky air, we know it is October. The mellowness of summer has passed. The twittering bird that calls to its mate to nest in the alderberry bush, has taken wing to the south, or else sits silently in some secluded spot, listening to the cross as he leads his flock to yonder swamp. Across the hill a herd aimlessly wanders from spot to spot, nipping off the remaining patches of green, and the dark woods are so verdantly but the weeks ago. Now and then a dark shape creeps from the forest and out over the landscape, followed by a halo of sunlight. One looks upward and against the deep blue of the sky, a bright cloud trying to find a place in the heavens. It is the messenger of winter and the gentle breeze seems its coming. Down in the valleys the winding streams murmur their constant song, and the willow, the tall bulrush and the water's edge. The water plays pitifully with the glinting reeds. All about the God of Silence has cast over them a spell and they do his bidding.

WILD DUCKS IN COUNTLESS THOUSANDS IN THE VICINITY OF SCUGOG LAKE

(Toronto Telegram.)
Port Perry, Oct. 17.—Down here, where the wild rice grows, ducks are congregating for the flight south. Immense flocks, numbering many thousands, swarm in the centre of the lake, a safe distance from shore. They form a dense mass a quarter of a mile long and hundreds of yards wide, literally solid ducks. Hunters on the lake shore can hear them splashing and quacking and when any portion of the huge aggregation starts to rise from the water, the noise is like distant thunder. Gunners, however, are having poor sport. The weather is too fine and the ducks not being driven to seek smooth water, rest where they are, disregarding the alluring bunches of decoys only to tempt them to destruction. Only towards sun-down does the flight commence, and then the birds, winging past to their feeding grounds, fly high up, mostly out of gun shot. 'KEEP OFF'.
Unfortunately these feeding grounds are situated in a part of the lake to which the public have no access. A club, composed for the most part of Toronto men, have secured some sort of right over this section, from which trespassers are sternly warned off. Residents of the district—especially guides—dispute this authority. It seems that a part of the area acquired is drowned land. This territory was originally farm property, inundated by the operations on the Trent Canal. The farmers in due course were indemnified by the Government for their land. Since then there have been several encounters between gamekeepers and alleged trespassers. In several instances the interlopers were dispossessed of their guns and threatened with pains and penalties, but upon the law being invoked it was decided that the lessees or occupants had no valid right to exclude. Whereat the guns were rendered back and the cases dismissed.

BELIEVE BOY WAS DOPED

Kingston Standard.—Young Ernest Emmans, the boy who was taken from the G. T. R. station on Saturday, in an unconscious condition and who claims that he was doped on his way east from Toronto, is progressing nicely at the general Hospital. The theory that his travelling companions from Lindsay was some sort of a dope fiend seems to hold good as the stranger gave the youth a sum of money.

POACHERS PERSIST. The rights of the owners constitute a queer legal complication, and the defendants won out on the point that while the occupants were entitled to the land beneath the water, the water itself, especially that part that the

DOUGHNUTS

Oh, do you remember the doughnuts, my friend, that you used to get long years ago? The kind that were crisp and fluffy and short—not the spongy and soggy old bakery sort—but the kind made by mother, you know. When the lad was spluttering, there on the stove, and ma was a-rushing around, kneading and rolling and cutting away, while your mouth was just simply a-watering say! But then was the days, I'll be bound!

And do you remember the way you would beg for that piece that came out of the hole, and once in a while she would fry one for you? It was round as a ball and delicious? Say, them was the days, on my soul. The old-fashioned dough nut is passing away. No more can that dainty be found. The new-fangled cooks have a new-fangled system. They roll 'em out long, then take them and twist 'em, instead of round.

Yes, their twisting out ancient, old-fashioned ideas; they're a-gettin' beyond our control. There's a sob in our voice and a tear in our eye when we see them let all the old customs go by and make doughnuts without a hole
