What a handicap it is to be old, and a woman! Good-night, gentlemen. It may surprise you to learn that I wish you success. I grieve for the loss of my pathized with his feeling. I sympamore if I thought that Gillies had got away safe with his thirty!"

Two hours later Scarborough and Scott were standing on the sea-shore with Varney, looking out over the water towards the Ring-Rock. Darkness had fallen, but a bright moon sent long quivering flashes from the swell of the waters, and shone upon a curious white cloud which lay upon the sea about half a mile out.

"It is the new islet which Davis spoke of," said Varney. "That cloud of steam has been rising continuously from it all the time that I have been here, and if you put your hand in the water, you will feel how warm it is." There is something black out there beyond," said Scott. "Yes, it's a schooner. She has been there or thereabouts for the last three hours, but she doesn't show any lights. Gillies' boat is lying at the back of the headland there.'

"No, it isn't!" exclaimed Scarbor ough, suddenly. "It has just but out to sea, and is making for the schooner! Come on!"

They ran Elsa's boat into the water and jumped aboard. Scarborough and Varney took the oars, and Scott steered. There was no wind for sailing, and Gillies' boat had only a single occupant. With two oars against his two sculls they should be able to catch him before he reached the orange Presently Scott shouted:-"He is making straight for the cloud of steam, and the steamer is standing in towards him!" "Then follow him! He hopes to dodge us in the mist." A minute later Scott stood up with

"Hold her hard! For heaven's sake, stop her! He's done for!"

There was a dull roar from the sea ahead. A cloud of steam shot hissing into the air, and a heavy wave rolled towards them. They held the nose of the boat to meet it as it came, and rode over it in safety. But the water which came overboard from the wave's crest was hot-hot enough to scald

That this should be done is the wish of every person, except one, who has any concern in the matter at all.
