Barry Executed Innocent Woman

Dr. Albert Wilson, late president of the Royal Medical Society, Edinburgh, writes to Lloyd's News as follows:

"Having always been doubtful of the value of capital punishment, about four years ago I asked Barry, the ex-hangman, to come and see me. I found him an interesting man, with a pleasing, kindly face, stout and hearty. He was previously a police constable, and always had the desire to be public executioner. He assisted Marwood on several occasions, and described his method (the knot under the chin) as cruel and clumsy. Barry placed the slip-knot under the left ear, and said his victims 'looked beautiful.'"

"He told me that he gave up his office because the execution by him of two innocent persons got on his nerves."

"The first was a farm boy, aged about eighteen, accused of shooting a policeman, I think, in Gloucester or Somerset. In the cell the lad kissed him and protested his innocence. Before the drop fell he said, 'Mr. Barry you will live to see that I am innocent.'"

"Some time after this he hanged the two Netherby Hall murderers. No one could sympathize with them. The first murderer, while being hanged, asked Barry if he had hanged this youth, adding that his confederate, Jack Martin, shot the policeman in his presence. Jack Martin confirmed this."

"The next case was more painful, that of Mary Leffley, in Lincolnshire. The poor woman clung to the bedstead, protesting her innocence. The governor, the matron and Barry forcibly dressed her. She was carried screaming to the gallows. The rope was put around her neck, and she was thrown into the pit, making frantic efforts all the while to free herself. This was Barry's description, which may not coincide with the Home Office official report."

"Mary Leffley was accused of poisoning her husband with arsenic. There was no evidence that she ever possessed arsenic, but there was much popular indignation against her. Some years later a farmer, dying of cancer, confessed to the crime. He had a quarrel with John Leffley, and when both Mary and John were out, he entered their cottage and put arsenic in a milk pudding baking for John's dinner.

SUNKEN SHIP CONTAINS BULLION

Five million dollars in bullion, which has lain buried for over a century in the watery safe deposit of the Zuyder Zee, may be recovered from the deep within the next few weeks. If the work of salvage is successful, it will bring to completion one of the most romantic stories of treasure hunting known to history.

The British frigate Lutine sank at the entrance of the Zuyder Zee in October, 1799. She had then on board £1,217,000 in bullion and money. The Dutch government claimed the wreck, and granted one-third of the salvage in 1801 to bullion fishers. After much discussion and occasional discoveries, the King of the Netherlands ceded half the wreck to Great Britain. About £99,893 was recovered at various times, leaving about £1,175,000 within the hulk, but during the lapse in salvage operations the site was obscured by silt. Many attempts have been made in the last fifty years to relocate the wreck, but only recently has this been successfully accomplished.

For two summers Captain Gardner of the National Salvage Association, at the head of a band of gold seekers, has fought upon the salvage ship Lyons the fierce currents that run between the islands of Vlieland and Terschelline.

The men on the Lyons still feel the thrill of the words of Diver R. T. Baillie, who only recently came up from the wreck with great tidings. When they unscrewed Baillie's helmet, he turned to Captain Gardner. "I believe I have found the gold," he said.

A fortnight before he and another diver found a fourth cannon belonging to the Lutine. On that day Baillie struck what he believes to be the treasure.

On the decks lie masses of cannon balls and shot, but along her ribs are holes and rents showing the broken, jagged ends of planks and timber. It was by investigating in one of these crevices that the diver found the bullion. He had crawled on his hands and knees to get inside bodily, but the ragged rents threatened his life lines and air tubes. If they had pierced his dress he would never have seen daylight again. Still he groped on, like a blind man.

Fifteen times he tried to get hold of some part of the interior. Fifteen times he failed. Eventually while stretching as far as he could around the corner of gaping timber, his hand touched something hard and square. Baillie has handled bars of bullion before, and knew the "feel" of them.

There was, however, no moving the precious metal, so after a vain attempt, Baillie signalled to the men above, who sent down a line and with this he fastened a buoy to the hope in the side of the Lutine. They pulled him up out of the sand and hoisted him aboard—the man who had stood next to £1,000,000 at the bottom of the sea.

The fall of the decks has imprisoned the treasure in the strongest chest imaginable, and it will require a "pill" of dynamite to take it from the grip of the fifteen inches thick beams. So the Lyons men wait day and night for the wind to go down; and the lighthouse of Yerschelling flashes in the darkness over the bleak island and the wrecks that lie buried in the sand.

According to the reports of the divers, the Lutine is in a fearful place, full of the ghosts of dead men and haunted by a numberless host of huge crabs.

More than one diver has had an awkward moment owing to the rapidity with which the sand moves. On one occasion a man was so intent on his work that he did not notice how the silt was piling up around him.

He was knee deep before he recognized his position, and when he tried to lift his feet he found he could not move.

The sand clung to his dress and held him fast, in spite of all his struggles, and every moment he was sinking deeper into the ooze.

For a time he struggled, but it was impossible to move a foot. Finally he signalled his position to the attendants in the boat, and asked to be drawn up by the life line. It was done, and the diver was pulled up from his perilous position like a cork from a bottle. There is great optimism among the crew, from Captain Gardner down. They are certain they will find the treasure before long.

PERILS AT SEA IN OPEN BOAT

The perils of the small boat at sea are told by Jack London in an article on Small Boat Sailing in the Yachting Monthly.

"About the liveliest eight days of my life were spent in a small boat on the west coast of Korea," he writes. "I was in an open boat, a sampan, on a rocky coast, where the tides ran from thirty to sixty feet. My crew were Japanese fishermen. We did not speak each other's language. Yet there was nothing monotonous about the trip. Never shall I forget one particular cold-bitter dawn, when in the thick of driving snow we took in sail and dropped our small anchor."

"The Japanese crawled under a communal rice mat, and went to sleep. I joined them, and for several hours we dozed fitfully. Then a sea deluged us with icy water and we found several inches of snow on top of the mat."

"It soon became a case of swamping on board in growing volume and we bailed constantly. And still my fishermen crew eyed the surf battered shore and did nothing."

"At last, after many narrow escapes from complete swamping, the fishermen got into action. All hands tailed on the anchor and hove it up. Forward, as the boat's head paid off, we set a patch of sail about the size of a floor sack. And we headed straight for the rocky shore. I unlaced my shoes, unbuttoned my greatcoat and coat and was ready to make a quick partial strip a minute or so before we struck. Before us opened a narrow channel, frilled at its mouth with breaking seas. Yet long before, when I had scanned the shore closely, there had been no such channel. I had forgotten the thirty foot tide. And it was for this time that the Japanese had so precariously waited."

"Marie, you certainly are a fright."

"I knew you would like this gown. Isn't it too hideously fashionable for words?"—Kansas City Journal.

CONVERSION OF SIR JOHN A.

Montreal, November 18.—Some new light on the subject of the conversion of Sir John A. Macdonald was given by the Rev. H. T. Crossley, the evangelist, in the course of his sermon in the Westmount Methodist Church on Sunday night.

"The Rev. Mr. Hunter and myself opened a revival meeting in Ottawa," Mr. Crossley said. "Sir John A. Macdonald was present at these meetings three nights a week for seven weeks and a half. All present prayed hard for the conversion of the 'Old Chief' and their efforts did not go unrewarded, for one evening I received an invitation to dine with Sir John and Lady Macdonald."

"No wine was on the table and Sir John said to me, 'I was never skeptical. I had a good Presbyterian father and mother, and in my younger days attended the Methodist camp meetings. I have been a great sinner, however.'"

"One night near the close of our meeting he stood up singing beside Lady Macdonald, and shortly afterwards his surrender to Christ. Three years after this he died a good Christian man. One of the first we expect to meet as we pass through the pearly gates is Sir John whom we regard as our greatest son."

THE MARKETS

LIVERPOOL, Nov. 18.—The visible supply of wheat in Europe this week amounts to 84,160,000 bushels, against 81,088,000 bushels, thus showing an increase of 3,072,000 bushels; last week there was an increase of 3,892,000 bushels, and last year an increase of 300,000 bushels, when the total amounted to 88,100,000 bushels.

The wheat market responded to realising and prices were 3/4 lower at the opening, reflecting bearish American visible supply, expected large increase in the visible here and favorable weather reports from Argentina.

Corn opened unchanged to 3/4 lower and later advanced 1/4 to 3/4, with less pressure here.

CHICAGO, Nov. 18.—Reinsuring reports from Argentina lowered wheat values here today 1-2c to 3-4c net; weakness in southwest markets depressed corn to a net loss of 1-2c to 3-4c, oats declined 1-4c to 1-2c in sympathy with other grain, and provisions sank because of a decline at the yards, the net loss being a shade to 5c.

TORONTO GRAIN MARKET.—Wheat, fall bushel, $0.88 to $0.89; Barley, bushel, $0.63 to $0.64; Peas, bushel, $0.50 to $0.51; Oats, bushel, $0.38 to $0.40; Rye, bushel, $0.60 to $0.61; Buckwheat, bushel, $0.51 to $0.52.
