"Polly," 106 Years in the Service, Is Still on the Sea

Much has been said lately of an American vessel, the "Polly," 45 tons, which still keeps to the sea, though she is in her 106th year of service. This is a respectable age for any vessel, but there are older ones on the British register. The oldest, says the Manchester Guardian, is the "Jenny," of Carnarvon, but we know nothing of her except that she is 122 years old. The next in order of age is the "May," of Whitehaven, sometimes called the "Molly Ashcroft," to distinguish her from other "Mays." The "May" was built at Cowes in 1798 so she is 112 years old, six years older than the American vessel. Tonnage is a very variable quantity according to the system of measurement. The "May' was originally rated at 34 tons, but she has been registered by the Board of Trade as 12.76 tons. Visitors to Ramsey had an opportunity of seeing her there on a fishing expedition last

For all her 112 years, the "May" is still capable of coming through an adventure or two. She came from Whitehaven in a gale nine years ago and was brought there by her present owner, who regularly fishes in her with a crew of three or four. She is a "jigger smack"-that is, she had a small after-mast. She was dismasted in a gale last winter, but she is in first-class trim to-day, and her owner speaks highly of her qualities. Of course, the question is always asked how far an old boat has been patched up and how much of the original fabric remains. As a matter of fact, the "May" was practically rebuilt 18 years ago but a boat must be sound to stand extensive repairs, and the fact, therefore, does not really detract so much as one might think from the wonder of her immense age.

The kea, or Nestor notabilis, which is found in New Zealand, is a carnivorous bird. It perches on the back of a sheep, and fixing its claws into the wool, probes deeply into the flesh with its powerful beak. The kea is rarer than it used to be, owing to a price being put on its head by the

Among the new mammals there stands out conspicuously the Great Galago. This odd little creature has been nicknamed by the Portuguese the "Rat of the Cocoanut Palm." One great authority, Sir John Kirk, has asserted that it is incapable of resisting the fascinations of palm wine, and will brave captivity for the sake of indulging in its favorite drink.

ITALIAN LOVE TRAGEDY

A Husband Shoots His Wife and Her

An amazingly tragic story comes from Italy. One of the wealthiest citizens of Leghorn, suspicious of his wife's fidelity, pretended to be going away on a visit to Florence, and meanwhile watched events from a house which he had hired opposite to his own. He saw a friend of his enter about midnight, and on crossing to his own house, discovered the former in his wife's boudoir. He immediately shot the man, and then, at her own request, inflicted the same penalty on his wife. On explaining the cause of the disturbance to a mob which had gathered in the street below he was loudly cheered.

Arrangements for Magnificent Ceremony at Carnarvon Castle in July Are Being Made

The work of selecting the committee Prince of Wales at Carnarvon Castle next July has practically been concluded by the Duke of Norfolk and his advisers. In the course of a few days the list of distinguished names will be handed to the King for his approval. A fortnight or so later the committee will hold its first meeting.

tee will be needed regarding the framing of the ritual for the actual ceremony, which will be exclusively the work of the Earl Marshal, the College of Arms, and finally, of his Majesty himself, who, as all the Empire knows, is an accomplished student of heraldry and historic ritual.

For the investiture of the Prince of Wales there are few precedents to refer to, but it was stated recently on the best authority that the Carnavon ritual will be largely based upon that for the ceremony which took place at West minster on the occasion of the investiture of the Black Prince in 1343. In many ways, however, the ceremony will be modernized.

It is understood that the Queen will take an important part in the ceremony. Among other suggestions which will be made to the committee of arrangements is one that the Welsh bards should be present.

RECORDING MUSIC ON NEW MACHINE

Instrument Invented That is of Great Help to Composer-No Notes Will Be Lost Now

A famous critic once made the rather sweeping statement that "more masterpieces were lost to music than were ever gained." Strange as this remark may at first appear, there was a good deal of truth in it. He meant, I of course, that many wonderful passages which must have been played by great composers while idly fingering the plano were lost forever. The brain of the genius is notoriously fitful, and while working out one idea a dozen others might subconsciously be communicated to the fingers, and their value not appreciated until too late. Such tragedies must be frequent.

Now, however, by the aid of a new invention with the rather formidable name of the "Automusicograph," nothing need be lost to music in the future. This ingenious apparatus, which can be attached to any piano, records on a roll of music paper every note that is played whether good, bad, or indifferent. Many an amateur can compose melodies in his head, and play them but few can write music as it should be written. Now this little | machine does that part of the work.

It takes the form of a small cabinet with a glass front, and is fixed over the reading desk. A paper roll, marked with different colored lines, is placed inside and the clockwork machinery set going. As it revolves, every which is to undertake the arrange note that is touched is marked upon it ments for the investiture of the in typewriter fashion. When the sheet of paper is detached after playing, a graduated gauge is placed by the side of it which determines the exact position of the note. Don Angelo Barbitri, the inventor, claims for it that it is not only accurately reproduces the notes played, but also the time. The value of the No amateur advice from the commit- device, therefore, to every composer who extemporizes will be enormous. Mascagni, the famous composer, is using one of these machines in writing his new opera, "Eisibeau."

HATS FROM PARIS

Present Large Picture Creations the Most Artistic Yet Seen

A hat from Paris! Show me the woman who is not attracted by such a bait. In the French capital to-day $100 is regarded as a comparatively low price to pay for one of the popular hats of automobile-tire dimensions, and having but the slightest apology for trimming in the way of a tiny cord or band of fur or a single rose. But why so dear? may be asked. Well, it is all because of the line, the cut, if one may so term it, as a leading milliner expressed it the other day.

Truly, the present large picture hats are the most artistic headgear seen here in many years. During the summer season when Paris is supposed to The Government's "Nevy" is Not Much | be dead the designers for great milliners spend many an hour in the Louvre or the Carnavalet galleries, or studying the wonderful conection of the National Library, and the result of which can be easily seen in this year's hats, many of which are copies of the Directoire and Louis XV. and Louis ern and western coasts, and with the XVI. styles. FAIR AVIATORS

Rivalry Among the Women Champions of the Air

There is a remarkable competition in France just now between the fair flying champions of France, Mile, Dutrieu and Mile. Marvingt. Mlie. Helene Dutrieu flies at Etampes, and Mile. Marvingt at Mourmelon.

The latter is a pupil of M. Latham, the former is a pupil of M. Henri Farnam. Not long ago Mile. Marvingt flew for fifty-three minutes at Mourmelon, and now Mile. Dutrieu has snatched the record from her by flying for one hour nine minutes at Etampes. Both are handsome young women, lively on the ground, and as cool as cucumbers in the air. The "Telegraph" says they steer aeroplanes as if they were only perambulators, and have a miraculous way of avoiding accidents. They know nothing about the motors and want to know nothing. One of them was told not to touch a feedpipe when in the air. She did touch however, because she forgot, and the machine came down gently, knowing, as it were, that the intention was harmless. Both of them are competing for the Coupe Femina, which is a prize offered by M. Pierre Laffitte for the best flight of a feminine pilot before the end of this year. When Mile. Marvingt achieved her record at Mourme on, Mile. Dutrieu was piqued at Etampes. A pupil of Farman, she prided herself that she could do as well as a pupil of Latham. Despite a breeze she went up and flew till it became too dark to see. She covered a distance of about thirty-eight miles round a four-mile course. For the present, therefore, she is entitled to the Coupe Femina; but Mile. Marvingt is getting ready to fly one better at Mourmelon under the direction of M. Latham.
