There is only one way to cure indigestion; the medicine must act upon the digestive organs-not upon their contents. GROCERS SHOULD ADVERTISE SUCCESSFUL CONVENT PUPILS

IT PAYS TO BID FOR THE TRADE OF RESULTS OF THE EXAMINATIONS THE SURROUNDING DISTRICT

That is Necessary (The Canadian Grocer.)

In looking through a goodly number of Canadian weekly newspapersdailies, too-for examples of advertising. I was struck with the absence of grocery advertisements. There were dry goods announcements in abundance, but comparatively littla grocery adventising. Just how to explain this condition of affairs is hard. It would seem, however, to indicate that the grocery dealers belittle the value of adventising; that is, so far as their business is concerned. I cannot do otherwise than consider it short-sighted, and a misuge of opportunity for a grocery dealer of any pretention or ambition not to advertise. Accordingly, I desire at this particular time, at the opening of new year, to talk over very briefly this subject.

With a good many, the question of cost is the barrier that stands in the way of their advertising. The uncertainity of its "paying" is sufficient reason for them to refuse Two Lindsay rinks were billed to to spend money on advertising. The intangible character of the transaction is so present with them in their consideration of the subject that they think of advertising as nothing more afternoon, Beaverton winning by 15 or less than a gamble. Others, again shots. Crandell played McRae and are unable to judge the value of the got a bad trouncing, thanks to the newspaper space, and are inclined to think any proposal by a publisher as being decidedly too profitable for the publisher, and dislike exceedingly to enter into any contract where the profits are so enormous.

This question of the cost of advartising is very apt to be viewed in a very wrong and narrow way. No newspaper publisher can guarantee that an advertisement in his paper will be profitable, yet this is just what many a merchant wishes the publisher to do. A publisher sells space, nothing more, nothing less. He offers space in his paper, three inches deep, six inches deep, one celumn wide, two columns wide, three columns wide. He sells space and this space is worth money; how much money depends upon the extent and character of the circulation. He gives merchants an opportunity through the use of space in his paper to tell the community what to buy, and where to buy. An opportunity, to tall 500, 1,000, or 3,000 families, a large portion of whose money is being spent daily for groceries, why this money should be spent at one store rather than at another, is worth no small sum to a wideawake, aggressive, ambitious retailer. Such a man has every week several excellent reasons for inviting these families, the heads of the households, to his store, and there is no cheaper, speedier, better way to acquaint buyers with his weekly offerings than by engaging space in a local paper. In dismissing this question of the cost of advertising let me say that -if done rightly. I know grovery dealers in towns where conditions are much the same as those that exist in almost every community this whole country over, who are ready to say that they could not do business without advertising. The cost of advertising doesn't concern them; the necessity of advertising was long ago admitted. The business producing power of advertising is daily perceived. But these men put their whole thought into their announcements to the public and fill the space they employ with news that throbs with the activity of a busy store. The purpose of this department of Advertising Suggestion and Criticism in "The Grocer" is to assist re- an Irishman, exclaimed-"Stop, ivery tailers in the advertising. If any grocery dealer feels himself unable to write advertisements that will sell goods, he will find in these col umns every week something cal culated to help him in this direction; if his difficulties are not being me or touched upon, he is urged to write a personal letter to the editor, who Toronto, are sending down six rinks is ever ready to give what assistance

There is another phase of the advertising problem related to cost, yet quite another matter; namely, the question of what space to use. will be found in most cases that a small, short, pointed, specific, nicely set up advertisement will do more work than one which is long, indefinite, and loose looking. The temptahas been able to cure in all its stages, and that is tion is to tell too much, and the dan-
