Se that his hands would not be blistered in sliding in the ropes, he tied it in throw to the coping of the wall, he made from the handle of the pail in his cell. This he covered with a piece of bed clothing in order to deaden the sound of "the cling" when the hook came in contact with the stane. The west gate was the spot he selected for climbing over to freedom. The guard on duty was James Feet In the cell was found a dummy made of flower pots and other articles. The make up was sufficient to deceive any official. The watch clock was wound regularly, an indication that the guard was awake and alert. His rounds were made regularly. "At 5 o'clock," said the warden, "the guard says he spoke to Chalabran. He means that he addressed the form in the bed in the cell. That was quite Takes to the Water. It seems that after dropping from the wall on the west side, the convict cut loose the yawl of the schooner Marshall, loading stone at the prison wharf, and used it to propel himself ever to Portsmouth. The yawl was not further used. It is thought that the convict has escaped by way of the water, as he was an expert sailor. It is six years since a prisoner suc+ cessfully got away. That convict hid in a building while the gang were marched back from the farm. He was never caught. It is a score or more of years since a convict got away from the inside. To get out generally requires aid. Chalabran left in his prison garb, a red and grey check. Chalabran was found guilty of murdering Constable Irwin, who went to arrest him on a train standing as Webbwood Station, not far from the See. He escaped, and had his libertyfor several days, but in the man hunt that followed he was caught in a
