AN UNFORTUNATE FLEET.

How Japan has Disposed of Russia's War Vessels.

At the beginning of the war Russia had in the Far East, at Port Arthur, Vladivostok and Chemulpo, eighteen effective battleships and cruisers. Of this great fighting force six have been lost, one is totally disabled and another is repairing in Chinese ports, while seven have been badly damaged in battle and are bottled up at Port Arthur at the mercy of the Japanese land batteries and Togo's fleet.

There remain only to Russia four cruisers, the Askold, which is disabled and which is making repairs at the Chinese ports of Woosung; the Rossia and Gromobol, damaged in battle and in flight; and Novik, also in flight.

The following list shows the class and tonnage of the Russian vessels in the Far East at the beginning of the war, with the casualties suffered by them and their present probable location.

Askold—Armored cruiser, 7,800 tons, totally disabled by mines, now at Port Arthur.

Czarevich—Battleship, 36,110 tons, totally disabled in the battle of Aug. 10, now at Port Arthur.

Gromobol—Armored cruiser, 12,326 tons, badly damaged in battle of Aug. 14, now in flight on way to Vladivostok.

Peresviet—Battleship, 12,674 tons, badly damaged in battle of Aug. 10, now at Port Arthur.

Petrovovsk—Battleship, 10,950 tons, sunk by Japanese mine at Port Arthur April 13.

Pobeda—Battleship, 12,674 tons, badly damaged in battle of Aug. 10, now at Port Arthur.

Pelvaia—Battleship, 10,900 tons, badly damaged in battle of Aug. 10, now at Port Arthur.

Retviza—Battleship, 12,700 tons, badly damaged in battle of Aug. 10, now at Port Arthur.

Rosk—Armored cruiser, 12,300 tons, badly damaged in battle of Aug. 14, now in flight on way to Vladivostok.

Burik—Armored cruiser, 10,940 tons, sunk by Japanese mine at Port of Aug. 14.

Askold—Protected cruiser, 6,100 tons, badly damaged in battle of Aug. 10, now in dock at the Chinese port of Woosung.

Bogatyr—Protected cruiser, 6,750 tons, blown up by mine at Vladivostok.

Boyarin—Protected cruiser, 3,200 tons, sunk by Japanese mine at Port Arthur, Feb. 7.

Diana—Protected cruiser, 6,620 tons, badly damaged in battle of Aug. 10, now probably at Port Arthur.

Novik—Protected cruiser, 3,200 tons, at sea in flight, thought to be on her way to Vladivostok.

Pallada—Protected cruiser, 6,620 tons, badly damaged in battle of Aug. 10, at Port Arthur.

Varyag—Protected cruiser, 6,200 tons, sunk in battle at Chemulpo Feb. 8.

THE SWORD OF A SWORDFISH.

A Lindsay Citizen is Now Owner of a Magnificent Specimen.

Mr. John McSweeney is the proud owner of a sword which he would not exchange for all the glittering weapons sported by the officers of the 45th Victoria Regiment. He received it last week from his son-in-law, Mr. J. W. Calder, of Boston, Mass., with whom Mr. and Mrs. McSweeney recently spent two or three very pleasant weeks. The prized weapon was until a week ago, sported by a monster swordfish that was speared by some fishermen of Cape Cod after a terrific struggle in the course of which the men's boat was twice attacked and pierced by the envenomed fish.

The peculiar weapon is 3 ft. 6 in. long, and 4 1/2 inches wide at the hilt, or the point where it was sewn off. From the broad base the double-edged blade of the booby weapon tapers to a width of one inch at the point, and a thin covering of greenish hue, partaking of the nature of the skin of the fish, gives the blade the appearance of being enclosed in a close-fitting sheath. From the point a distance of a foot up the blade the sharp edges show black and other evidences of many a fierce combat. Mr. Calder informs Mr. McSweeney that the sword is one of the largest ever taken, and that its perfect condition is most unusual.
