 —An exchange tells us how one woman cured her horse of chronic fright at automobiles. She took a wheelbarrow and constructed it into a miniature devil wagon that would frighten the safest horse. Over it she hung a red blanket and lanterns on each side. Several bright tin pans were added. A long chain placed so it would rattle against the wheel added to the outfit. A lot of iron and stones were placed in the wheelbarrow, and it was ready. The aged woman pushed the thing up and down the barn floor before the horse, blowing a fish horn as she went. When it graduated from this course of instruction, its fear of anything so tame as an automobile was a thing of the past.
