FROM NEW YORK TO SOUTH AMERICA

Interesting Account of a Business Trip Taken by Mr. H. Clyde Gregory, a Lindsay Boy, in the Interests of a New York Firm.

Mr. H. Clyde Gregory, of the Sterling Consolidated Boiler Company, New York, who recently visited his mother, sister and brothers here, is one of the many Lindsay boys whose solid home training and fine natural abilities have enabled them to attain commanding positions in our neighboring republic. Since entering the employment of the above firm--one of the largest of its kind in the world--about six years ago, Mr. Gregory has worked his way through the several departments having to do with the Sales and Export branch of the business, and a little over a year ago was appointed manager at a handsome salary. The position entails much foreign travel in order to close up important contracts, and since his former visit to Lindsay about twelve months ago Mr. Gregory has made two trips to South America, (Uruguay and Brazil), one to France, and one to England and Scotland, in addition to numerous "trips" to Cuba, Porto Rico, Jamaica, Haiti and other islands of the sea, the various voyages totalling over 20,000 miles.

SOUTH AMERICA.
Mr. Gregory returned from his second trip to South America barely a month previous to his visit home, and to the Post he very kindly gave a hurried sketch of what he had seen and deemed worthy of mention. The ports of South America can be reached either by direct weekly steamer from New York, or via England, sailing monthly. The latter route offers more luxurious travel, but the voyage is a week longer, and the first mentioned line, which combines speed with comfort. Sailing from New York, the traveler reaches Pernambuco, Brazil, after a voyage of thirteen days. Pernambuco is an old city of 160,000 population, with much that is quaint and interesting. The next port is Bahia, one and one-half days distant, with 300,000 souls; then comes Rio de Janeiro, a busy hive of one million people who are justly proud of their grand city. Five days' ride reaches Montevideo, capital of the State of Uruguay, and nine hours' ride reaches Buenos Ayres--capital of the great State of Argentina--which has a population exceeding one million. Pernambuco, the capital of Brazil, is the port of entry for an enormous territory producing principally sugar and cotton. There are wonderful opportunities awaiting capitalists who will engage in the sugar industry, it being probably the most backward country in the world in that line, while naturally one of the best adapted for sugar raising. The cotton grown is

SENT TO ENGLAND.
Cotton seed oil and castor oil also are among the products of the country. Newfoundland dealers ship in considerable quantities which is greatly esteemed by the natives "up country." A coral reef extends along the coast for about 500 miles, its distance from the shore line varying from 100 yards to a quarter of a mile. At Pernambuco; ships enter through a narrow but deep passage and anchor in perfect safety, although at high tide waves break continuously over the reef, which is fifty yards wide. At low tide one can walk along the breastwork built by tiny animals and gather all sorts of curious shells and other treasures cast up by the huge ocean rollers. The city is one of the dirtiest imaginable despite the aids to cleanliness afforded by numerous rivers which run through it and earn for it the misallied title, "The Venice of South America." The streets are narrow, paved with cobble stones and are considerably filthy. Very few carriages are seen, miserable horse cars locally called "bonds" furnishing the popular means of transportation. The name originated from the fact that the pioneer street railway established in Brazil proved a

FINANCIAL FAILURE.
and the investors who had subscribed for stock and lost their money acquired the facetious habit--after their shares had been bought up for a song by shrewd capitalists and the line made a paying proposition--of pointing to a car and remarking, "There goes (or comes) my business." Brazilian people of the better class were extremely courteous in conversation and clearly in their habits, being as fond of bathing as are the Japanese. The bathroom is the principal room in the house--it should be in all tropical countries, but is not. The city of Bahia is the ancient capital of Brazil, and still continues the ecclesiastical centre. It is situated on a great bay about 20 miles wide and 40 miles deep, called Bay de San Salvador. This is the port to which Bartholomew Diaz, the old Portuguese explorer, blundered when seeking a passage around Cape Good Hope in 1487 being probably the first man from overseas who had landed on the shores of South America. The city comprises Upper and Lower Town, the latter--the business residential section being located on the cliffs above--200 feet up--the trip being made by means of a zig-zag roadway, inclined cable road or hydraulic elevators, as preferred. The latter method is most popular and lands one in the Plaza--a big red square, around which are situated the Governor's palace and the municipal and legislative buildings. From the Plaza the outlook over the bay and shipping is a magnificent one. The city is the center of the Brazilian diamond trade, which is principally in the hands of Jews. Tobacco and coffee are largely grown in the interior, and enough sugar is manufactured to supply the local demand. The magnificent cathedrals and churches to be seen on the most commanding sites justify the title, "The City of Churches."

Four Storey Farm in Missouri.
(Columbia Herald.)
From Howard country comes the tale of a four-storey farm, Charles Ridgeway in its owner and the farm is located near Fayette. Mr. Ridgeway has a fine clover field. Beneath the clover is one of the richest beds of coal and underneath the coal is a fine bed of shale, from which excellent building brick is made. In and above the clover is an apple orchard, on which there is an abundant crop of apples. This makes a four-storey farm--shale, coal, clover, apples--and shows how the wealth is piled up in Missouri.

Traced to Its Source.

No Chance Here.

(Cottager and Artisan.)
"There is no chance around here for a fellow. If I could get away I'd soon show the home folks what's in me."
So says many a restless lad, who, though anxious to get on in life, has not yet realized that success is by no means a matter of surroundings.

If he is so placed that he cannot go elsewhere, a spirit of stubborn pride sometimes prevents him from working at all, or else he labors so half-heartedly as to make his services of but little value. If he is given his own way, it is frequently only after many hard knocks consequent upon his many changes that he begins to suspect that, if he is to succeed at all, the root of success must be within himself. Then, if he is wise, he learns to adapt himself to his surroundings, and sets himself to work out his life-problem in earnest.

The great Abraham Lincoln, who wrested glorious success from most untoward conditions, wrote pithily of this subject to a step-brother, who was always changing both his occupation and his way of living. Gifts of money were of no avail. No sooner were they expended than the old story of the need for a change was heard. The patient elder brother offered to give him a dollar for each one he earned if he would but work steadily for four or five months in one situation, but the generous offer was not accepted. It would be better, thought the younger man, to go farther West at once in pursuit of success.

The reply of the martyred President to this proposition should be weighed well by every restless lad. What can you do in Missouri better than here? he wrote. Is the land any richer? Can you there, any more than here, raise corn and wheat and oats without work? Will any one there than here do your work for you? Squirming and crawling about from place to place can do you no good. If you do not intend to work, you cannot get along anywhere, and if you intend to work there is no better place than right where you are.

Will Deliver Series of Lectures

The Branch here are hoping by these illustrations and lectures to arouse much interest in the great work of the Bible Society.

Paper Casinges.

Gas pipes of paper are being made in France. Manila paper is cut in strips equal to the length of the gas pipes to be made. These are then placed in a receiver filled with melted asphalt and wrapped around a core of iron until the desired thickness is reached. After being submitted to strong pressure the paper is coated with sand, cooled, the core withdrawn, and the outer pipe surface covered with a water-proof preparation. It is claimed that these pipes are as good as, and more economical than metal ones.
