THE DECORATIONS.

As one entered the spacious hall, a very brilliant picture was presented. Lights in profusion were made more glowing by masses of rich, red berries entwined with smilax and other trailing foliage, while palms, ferns and potted plants filled every nook and corner. In the hall upstairs, the same scheme was carried out. The drawing room was a veritable bower of pink chrysanthemums and smilax, adorning every available space, and across the handsome mantle, with its polished mirror, festoons of smilax, clusters of the pink chrysanthemums, and pink candles, reflected their beauty all around. In the large front window a giant palm some five feet high, and similar ones of a smaller size, formed a fresh, green background for the bridal parfy, who, took their places before it, and the soft blending of the bridal colors and the foliage made a perfect picture. The four bridesmaids stood on the right of the bride and groom. In the sitting room the decorations Drs. Jeffers, Collison, Blanchard, were yellow chrysanthemums and Cameron (Woodville), Rev. Mr. Walsmilax, and the brightly burning fire lace, Mr. Robt. Ross, Mr. Steers, Mr. on the hearth mingled its light with Thos. Stewart, Judge Harding, Mr. that of the softly shaded candelabra J. R. In the dining room, perhaps, we were most fascinated with the table and its adornments. In the centre of the large and hospitable board a charming centreriece was the background for the bride's cake. This most interesting object was richly carved with those indescribable little figures wrought in purest white icing, and rested on a silver tray, draped with green guaze. Round the entire sides his fair young bride is well worthy of the table garlands of smilax lay gracefully easy. In large vases were buge white chrysanthemums, and as a compliment to the white cake, numberiess angel cakes stood sentries around the table. Those beautiful decorations of white and green were everywhere in the dining-

After the fair young bride had received the good wishes of her legion guests, she withdrew to the diningroom to give the first thrust of the knife to her cake. Immediately afterwards refreshments were served by a group of prettily gowned girls. SOME STRIKING JOWNS.

Numbers of beautiful gowns were worn at the reception, and among many who wore them were: First, of course, the sweet young

The skirt was flounced with pleated chiffon, with fluting of same; the front was a beautiful creation of the chiffon. The bridal boquet was a large sheaf of bride roses and asparagus ferns, tied with a large bow of white satin ribboo, with extend ends. She wore a crescent of pearls. The bridesmaids-the Misses Hard-

IDENTIFIED BY FRIENDS.

Scarcely Any Doubt Now That the Schooner Emerald Has Been Lost-Capt. Van Vlack Last Spoke the Emerald on Sunday, Nov. 15, and Was Saluted in Return-Night Was

Port Hope, Nov. 30 .- Capt. Williams of Toronto, and Capt. Woodcock of Fesserton, two lifelong friends of Capt. McMaster of the missing schooner Emerald, came here yesterday from Toronto and searched the shore near this town. About one mile east of Gull lighthouse they found part of the schooner. The shutter of a cabin window and the top of a provision box were positively identified as portions of the missing vessel. The two captains fear she has been lost with all on

Last Faint Hope Gene. Toronto, Nov. 30 .- The last faint vestige of hope touching the safety and well being of the schooner Emerald has been destroyed. Yesterday a party composed of marine men. friends of Capt. McMaster, went down to Cobourg by the early morning train to examine the wreckage reported to have been washed ashore at that point, and their inspection sounded the death knell of the hopes that members of the family, and a large number of anxious friends, have been half-heartedly clinging to. Water sodden and defaced by exposure though they were, the fragments of wreckage conveyed their own ominous and fateful significance to eyes familiarized to the sight of the Emerald, and there is no doubt remaining in the minds of any member of the party as to the connection the driftwood bears to the disappearance of the ill-starred schooner.

What had drifted ashore was a portion of a cabin, and the color and graining of the wood are identical with those of the Emerald's cabin. Not only is there the verdict of the Toronto party to strike conviction home, but the testimony of Cobourg and Port Hope mariners who have seen the Emerald gives confirmation. They state positively that the pieces of wreckage formed a portion of the | ing is known of the cause of the ex-

> It is now a fortnight since the Emerald was due at the dock of the Toronto Electric Light Company with her cargo of 700 tons of slack. About a week passed after her nonappearance before any great apprehension was aroused.

Captain Van Vlack, as the last man to discern the missing craft, was plied with questions, but he has little to tell. About 5.30 p.m. on Sunday, Nov. 15, a time when dusk was fast merging into night, he dimly perceived the Emerald, about nine miles out from Charlotte, from the steam barge Van Allen. Captain McMaster, a bluff, hearty type of skipper, had set sail from Charlotte before him that afternoon, with a laughing remark about clearing out while the wind was fresh, so as to save tug dues. As the Van Allen passed the Emerald, she saluted, and the latter returned the salute. That is all Captain Van Vlack has to say touching his last sight of the ill-fated ctaft. It was a dirty night and there was a sufficiently high sea running to jeopardize the Emerald's deceive yourself any longer. safety in the event of any mishap to
