the king, having landed at Southampton for the purpose of throwing off the scent any one who might seek the ship. The king was delighted to see his sister, and kissed her over and over again. Mary had as hard a game to play as ever fell to the lot of woman, but she was equal to the emergency if any woman ever was. She did not give Henry the slightest hint that she knew anything of the Count of Savoy episode, but calmly assumed that of course her brother had meant literally what he said when he made the promise as to the second marriage.

The king soon asked: "But what are you doing here? They have hardly buried Louis as yet, have they?"

"I am sure I do not know," answered Mary, "and I certainly care less. married him only during his life and not for one moment afterward, so I came away and left them to bury him or keep him, as they choose; I care not to save whose life she had four months She and Queen Claude had forgotten nothing, and all arrangements were completed for the flight. A messenger had been dispatched two hours before with an order from Queen Claude that a ship should be waiting at Dieppe ready to sail immediately upon our arrival. After the ceremony Claude quickly bound up afary's nair, and the queens departed from the chapel in their coach. We soon followed, meeting them again at St. Denis gate, where we found the best of horses and four sturdy men awaiting us. The messenger to Dieppe who had preceded us would arrange for relays, and, as Mary, according to her wont when she had another to rely upon, had taken the opportunity to become thoroughly frightened, no time was lost. We made these forty leagues in less than twentyfour hours from the time of starting. having paused only for a short rest at a little town near Rouen, which city

We had little fear of being overtaken at the rate we were riding, but Mary said she supposed the wind would die down for a month immediately upon our arrival at Dieppe. Fortunately no one pursued us, thanks to Queen Claude, who had spread the report that Mary was ill, and, fortunately also, much to Mary's surprise and delight, when we arrived at Dieppe, as fair a wind as a sailor's beart could wish was blowing right up the channel. It was a part of the system of relays-horses, ship and wind.

"When the very wind blows for our special use, we may surely dismiss fear," said Mary, laughing and clapping her hands, but nearly ready for tears notwithstanding.

The ship was a fine new one, well fitted to breast any sea, and, learning this, we at once agreed that upon landing in England Mary and I should go to London and win over the king, if possible. We felt some confidence in being able to do this, as we counted upon Wolsey's help, but in case of failure we still had our plans. Brandon was to take the ship to a certain island off the Suffolk coast and there await us the period of a year if need be, as Mary might, in case of Henry's obstinacy, be detained, then revictual and reman the ship and out through the North sea for their former haven, New

In case of Henry's consent, how they were to live in a style fit for a princess Brandon did not know unless Henry should open his heart and provide for them, a doubtful contingency upon which they did not base much hope. At a pinch they might go down into Suffolk and live next to Jane and me she wanted above all else.

There was one thing now in favor of the king's acquiescence. During the

"But"- began Henry, when Mary interrupted him, saying, "I will tell you"-I had taken good care that Wolsey should be present at this interview. So we four - the king, Wolsey, Mary and myself-quietly stepped into a little alcove away from the others and prepared to listen to Mary's tale, which was told with all her dramatic eloquence and feminine persuasiveness. She told of the ignoble insults of Francis, of his vile proposals-insisted upon, almost to the point of force-carefully concealing, however, the offer to divorce Claude and make her queen, which proposition might have had its attractions for Henry. She told of her imprisonment in the Palace des Tournelles and of her deadly peral and many indignities, and the tale lost nothing in the telling. Then she finished by throwing her arms around Henry's neck in a passionate flood of tears and begging him to protect her, to save her, save her, save her, his lit-

It was all such perfect acting that for the time I forgot it was acting, and a great lump swelled up in my throat. It was, however, only for the instant, and when Mary, whose face was hidden from all the others on Henry's breast, smiled slyly at me from the midst of her tears and sobs, I burst into a laugh that was like to have spoiled everything. Henry turned quickly upon me, and I tried to cover it by pretending that I was sobbing. Wolsey helped me out by putting a corner of his gown to his eyes, when Henry, seeing us all so affected, began to catch the fever and swell with indignation. > Miss McGarvey had been keeping house for Upton, who was single, for the past nineteen years, and it is said that at times she was subject to spells of mental aberration. According to her own statement, she attempted the life of Upton in order to save him from some horrible torment which had appeared to her in a vision. This is also borne out by members of the family, who claim that she has been slightly demented for a number of years. Upton drove to Strathroy from his home seven miles from town, on the afternoon of Nov. 7, and called at the McGarvey resi-

SHOT AND POISON. Both Used By Leonard Spread a Barnardo Boy in Committing Suicide.

Ellesmere, Dec. 19.-A most determined case of suicide occurred on the farm of Alex. Sterling, near here. The victim was Leonard Spread, Mr. Sterling's farm hand. Spread took the horses to the blacksmith shop and had them shod Thursday after dinner, brought them home and put them in the stable. He was not seen again until yesterday morning. when his body was found in granery with the top of his head blown off. He had at first Paris green, as the drinking cup the pump was covered with it. Spread | loaded a shell and went to the granery, where the deed was committed. Mr. Sterling, on his arrival home on Thursday at dusk, found the horses all right, but supposed that the man had gone to a neighbor's. Spread was a "Barnardo boy," and was about 20 years old. Coroner Britton, upon investigation, decided that an inquest was unnecessary.

London, Dec. 19 .- Mr. Jardine, Canadian Trade Commissioner to South Africa, now in London, on being interviewed last night, said that South Africa would soon recover if white settlers would work as hard as Canadian farmers. Manitoba hard wheat flour proved the best against all competition, but Canada was doing a large trade in agricultural implements and carriages. Imperial sentiment had offset hundreds of American agents. Had the cattle disease not prevented, Rhodesia would be a splendid agricultural district.
