a royal heart. Wait for me, Masouda, wherever you may dwell." While the whispered words left his lips, it seemed to Godwin that once more, as when he rode with Wulf from the strange wind blew about and brow, oringing with it the presence of Masouda, and that once more the unearthly peace sank into his soul. Then all was past and over, and he turned to see the old imaum standing

"Did I not tell you that you would find her sleeping?" he said, with his bitter, chuckling laugh. "Call on her, Sir Knight; call on her! Love, they say, can bridge great gulfs-even that between severed neck and bosom."

With the silver lamp in his hand Godwin smote, and the man went down like a felled ox, leaving him once more in silence and in darkness. For a moment Godwin stood thus, till his brain was filled with fire, and no too fell-fell across the corpse of Masouda, and there lay still.

CHAPTER XXII.

Godwin knew that he lay sick, but save that Masouda seemed to tend him in his sickness he knew no more, for all the past had gone from him. There she was always, clad in a white robe, and looking at him with eyes full of ineffable calm and love, and he noted that round her neck ran a thin, red line, and wondered how it came

He knew also that he traveled while he was ill, for at dawn he would hear the camp break up with a mighty noise, and feel his litter lifted by slaves who bore him along for hours across the burning sand, till at length the evening came, and with a humming sound, like the sound of hiving bees,

"Tell them to cry upon the Saviour of spoken." the World." Then the voice of Masouda would seem to answer: "Judge not. No god whom men wor-roar of battle. Orders were given and men marched out in thousands; then rose that roar, and they marched back | me on- the fate of a dream, the fate again, mourning their dead. At last came a day when, opening his eyes, Godwin turned to rest them on Masouda, and lo! she was gone, and in her accustomed place there sat a man whom he knew well-Egbert, once bishop of Nazareth, who gave him to drink of sherbet cooled with snow. Yes, the Woman had departed and the Priest was there.

"Where am I?" he asked. "Outside the walls of Jerusalem, my son, a prisoner in the camp of Saladin," was the answer.

"And where is Masouda, who has sat by me all these days?" "In heaven, as I trust," came the gentle answer, "for she was a brave lady. It is I who have sat by you." "Nay," said Godwin obstinately, "it was Masouda."

"If so," answered the bishop again, "it was her spirit, for I shrove her and have prayed over her open grave -her spirit, which came to visit you from heaven, and has gone back to win. heaven now that you are of the earth

Then Godwin remembered the truth, and groaning, fell asleep. Afterwards, as he grew stronger, Egiert told him all the story. He learned that when he Was found lying senseless on the body of Masouda the emirs wished Saladin a great occasion has been taken from to kill him, if for no other reason be- me?" cause he had dashed out the eye of

So the imaum lost both his eye and Thus it had come about that the bishop Egbert was ordered to nurse him, and, if possible to save his life; and when at last they marched upon Jerusalem, soldiers were told off to bear his litter, and a good tent was set apart to cover him. Now the siege of the holy city had begun, and there was much slaughter on both sides. "Will it fall?" asked Godwin.

"I fear so, unless the saints help them," answered Egbert. "Alas! I fear

"Will not Saladin be merciful?" "Why should he be merciful, my son, since they have refused his terms and defied him? Nay, he has sworn that as Godfrey took the place nigh upon a hundred years ago and slaughtered the Mussulmen who dwelt there by thousands, men, women, and children together, so will he do to the Christians. Oh! why should he spare them? They must die! They must die!" and wringing his hands Egbert

Godwin lay still, wondering what the answer to this riddle might be. He could think of one, and one only. In Jerusalem was Rosamund, the Sultan's niece, whom he must desire to recapture, above all things, not only because she was of his blood, but since he feared that if he did not do so his vision concerning her would come to

Now what was this vision? That through Rosamund much slaughter should be spared. Well, if Jerusalem were saved, would not tens of thousands of Moslem and Christian lives be saved also? Oh! surely here was the answer, and some angel had put it into his heart, and now he prayed for strength to plant it in the heart of Saladin, for strength and opportunity.

This very day Godwin found the opportunity. As he lay dozing in his tent that evening, being still too weak to rise, a shadow fell upon him, and opening his eyes ne saw the sultan himself standing alone by his bedside Now he strove to rise to salute him, but in a kind voice Saladin bade him lie still, and seating himself, began to talk.

"I stole your cousin from her home, as her mother had has otolon from mina paying back ill with ill, which is against the law, and in his own hall my servants slew her father and your uncle, who was once my friend. Well, these things I did because a fate drove of a dream. Say, Sir Godwin, is that story which they tell in the camps true, that a vision came to you before the battle of Hatin, and that you warned the leaders of the Franks not to advance against me?"

"Yes, it is true," answered Godwin, and he told the vision, and of how hehad sworn to it on the Rood.

"And what did they say to you?" "They laughed at me, and hinted that I was a sorcerer, or a traitor in your pay, or both." "Blind fools, who would not hear the truth when it was sent to them by the pure mouth of a prophet," muttered Saladin. "Well, they paid the price, and I and my faith are the gainers. Do you wonder, then, Sir Godwin, that I also believe my vision which came to me thrice in the night season, bringing with it the pisture of the very face of my niece, the princess of sternly,

"See now, O Salah-ed-din, the princess Rosamund is in Jerusalem, She has been led to Jerusalem that you may spare it for her sake, and thus make an end of bloodshed and save the lives of folk uncounted."

"Never!" said the Sultan, springing up. "They have rejected my mercy, and I have sworn to sweep them away, man, woman, and child, and be avenged upon all their unclean and faithless race."

"Is Rosamund unclean that you would be avenged upon her? Will her dead body bring you peace? If Jerusalem is put to the sword, she must perish also."

"I will give orders that she is to be saved-that she may be judged for her crime by me," he added grimly. "How can she be saved when the stormers are drunk with slaughter, and she but one disguised woman among ten thousand others?"

"Then," he answered, stamping his foot, "she shall be brought or dragged begins." Derusalem before the slaughter "That, I think, will not happen while

Wulf is there to protect her," said Godwin quietly. "Yet I say that it must be so-it shall be so.' Then, without more words, Saladin left the tent with a troubled brow. Within Jerusalem all was misery, all was despair. There were crowded thousands and tens of thousands of fugitives, women and children, many of them, whose husbands and fathers of knights, who had returned to bear | had been slain at Hattin or elsewhere. The fighting men who were left had not commit, and that, although he was few commanders, and thus it came a Christian, he loved him as a friend. about that soon Wulf found himself the captain of very many of them. First Saladin attacked from west between the gates of Sts. Stephen and of David, but here stood strong fortresses called the Castle of the Pisans and the Tower of Tancred, whence the defenders made sallies upon him, driving back his stormers. So he determined to change his ground, and moved his army to the east, camping it near the valley of the Kedron. When they saw the tents being struck the Christians thought that he was abandoning the siege, and gave thanks to God in all their churches; but lo! next morning the white array of these appeared again on the east, and they knew that their doom was sealed. There were in the city many who desired to surrender to the Sultan, and flerce grew the debates between them and those who swore that they would rather die. At length it was agreed that an embassy should be sent, So it came under safe conduct, and was received by Saladin in presence of his emirs and counsellors. He asked them what was their wish, and they replied that they had come to discuss terms. Then he answered thus:

"In Jerusalem is a certain lady, my niece, known among us as the princess of Baalbec, and among the Christians as Rosamund D'Arcy, who escaped thither a while ago in the company of the knight, Sir Wuif D'Arcy, whom I | chapel. "Now I like it still less," Balian went on, "for to touch her would be sacrilege."

"His Holiness, Heraclius, will give us absolution," said a mocking voice. Then another leader rose-he was and pointed out that this was no time would not listen to them in their sore plight unless the lady were délivered to him to be judged for her offence. Perhaps, being his own niece, she would, in fact, suffer no harm at his hands, and whether this were so or not, it was better that one should endure wrong, or even death, than many,

With such words he over-persuaded the most of them, so that in the end they rose and went to the convent of the Holy Cross, where the patriarch demanded admission for them, which, indeed, could not be refused. The stately abbess received them in the refectory, and asked their pleasure.

"Daughter," said the patriarch, "you have in your keeping a lady named Rosamund D'Arcy, with whom we de- of so many hang upon it? Perhaps, sire to speak. Where is she?" "The novice Rosamund," answered the abbess, "prays by the holy altar

Now Rosamund rose and faced them, with her hand resting upon the altar. "I risked my life and I believe another gave her life," she said, "that I might escape from the power of the Moslems, I will not come forth to return to them."

"Then, our need being sore, we must take you," answered Heraclius sullen-

"What!" she cried. "You, the patriarch of this sacred city, would tear me from the sanctuary of its holiest altar? Oh! then, indeed shall the curse fall upon it and you. Hence, they say, our sweet Lord was haled to sacrifice by the command of an unjust judge, and thereafter Jerusalem was taken by the sword. Must I too be dragged from the spot that His feet have hallowed, and even in these weeds"and she pointed to her white robe-"thrown as an offering to your foes, who mayhap will bid me choose between death and the Koran? "Sirs, will you commit so great a crime? Then I tell you that it cannot go without its punishment. With this lady I say"-and she drew up her tall shape-"that it shall be paid for in your blood, and mayhap in the blood of all of us. Remember my words

"I absolve you from the sin," shouted the patriarch, "if sin it is." "Absolve yourself," broke in Wulf sternly, "and know this. I am but one man, but I have some strength and skill. Then, standing there before the altar rails, he lifted his great blade and

"My lord Patriarch, I pray you let this thing be, since from such a crime no good could come to us or any. That altar is the holiest and most noted place of sanctuary in all Jerusalem. Will you dare to tear a maiden from him on account of which we cannot | it whose only sin is that she, a Christian, has escaped the Saracone hy whom she was stolen? Do you ware to give her back to them and death, As he spoke a messenger entered for such will be her doom at the hands of Saladin- Surely that would be the act of cowards, and bring upon us the fate of cowards. Sir Wulf, put up your sword and fear nothing. If there is any safety in Jerusalem, your lady is safe. Abbess, lead her to her cell."

"Nay," answered the abbess with fine sarcasm, "it is not fitting that we should leave this place before his

"Then you have not long to wait," shouted the patriarch in fury. "Is this a time for scruples about altars? Is this a time to listen to the prayers of a girl or to threats of a single knight, or the doubts of a superstitious captain? Well, take your way and let your lives pay its cost. Yet I say that if Saladin asked for half the noble maidens in the city, it would be cheap to let him have them in payment for the blood of eighty thousand folk," and he stalked towards the door.

So they went away, all except Wulf, who stayed to make sure that they were gone, and the abbess, who came to Rosamund and embraced her, saying that for the while the danger was past, and she might rest quiet.

"Yes, mother," answered Rosamund with a sob, "but oh! have I done right? Should I not have surrendered myself to the wrath of Saladin if the lives after all, he would forget his oath and spare my life, though at best I should never be suffered to escape again while there is a castle in Baalbec or a guarded harem in Damascus. Moreover, it is hard to bid farewell to all one loves forever," and she glanced towards Wulf, who stood out of hear-

"Yes," answered the abbess, "it is hard as we nuns know well, But, daughter, that sore choice has not yet been thrust upon you. When Saladin says that he sets you against the lives of all this cityful, then you must "Ay," repeated Rosamund, "then I -must judge."

The siege went on; from terror to terror it went on. The mangonels hurl- | we carry a full line of Pubed their stones unceasingly, the arrows flew in clouds so that none could stand upon the walls. Thousands of the cavalry of Saladin hovered round St. Stephen's Gate, while the engines poured fire and bolts upon the doomed town, and the Saracen miners worked their way beneath the barbican and the wall. The soldiers within could not sally because of the multitude of the watching horsemen; they could not show themselves, since he .. tho did so was at once destroyed by a thousand darts, and they could not build up the breaches of the crumbling wall. As day was added to day, the despair grew ever deeper.
