THAT TERRIBLE APPENDIX. Dr. Edebohis Tells Something Abou

Its Contents. Mr. Geo. M. Edebohls, of New York, in the current Medical Record, presents "A Review of the History and Literature of Appendicatis," in which he has collected the salient facts from more than 2,500 published articles on the subject.

Those who have shunned the luscious grape because of the danger from the seeds may just as well continue to eat it, since so many other foreign bodies have been found in the vermiform appendix that the grape alone need not be dreaded. Dr. Edebohis mentions a grain of oat, a fin of a fish, a fruit stone, a chocolate nut, House, Lindsay. melon seeds, cherry stones, prune stones, raspberry seeds, a date seed, orange seeds, tomato seeds, a bean. A. gelatine capsule is also included in the list of foreign contents of that mi gazine. There is a reminder for boarders in the list, too, for, although ed as having been found there. Huckleberry and blackberry seeds, a piece of the snell of a hazel nut, pea- Moderate. property of the said Municipality of nuts, a piece of chestnut, a bristle, a glazier's point of zinc, a cartridge, a piece of a screw, and a knot of a heavy silk ligature that had been used in abdominal surgery were also in the list. Pins, the doctor says, have been the foreign bodies most frequently met, a statement which furnishes a mute approval of the objection mothers have to the infantile tendency to gobble pins, and possibly a warning to others who utilize the mouth in lieu of a pin-cush on.

It used to be thought that these foriegn bodies were the cause of appendicit's. But Dr. Edebohls says that the lodgment of these in the appendix is probably the result rather than the cause of the disease. Bacteriological investigation has shown, in practically every case, that appendicitis is due to bacterial invasion of the appendix walls.

The first operation for appendicitis, so far as the records show, was in 1759. That was for the purpose of drawing an abscess, not for the removal of the appendix. The beginning of the modern surgical treatment was in 1867. Since 1890, according to Dr. Edebohls, the large majority of surgeons advocate removal of the appendix in acute appendicitis.

A Comparison.

In the war of the American Revolution, the British army in America never exceeded 50,000 men, and the American colonists numbered over 2,-500,000. In the Transvaal war Britain is sending 120,000 troops while the number of Dutch in the Transvaal and Orange Free State is not more than about one tenth of the number of American colonists.
