

OPINION

The massive interest in Canada's imaginary vaccination laws

By Michael Bryant, Cara Zwibel Contributors

Wednesday, December 9, 2020

The Charter of Rights would have something to say about a law mandating vaccinations, if such a law arose after the 1982 patriation of our constitution. It hasn't. There are laws requiring public school students to be vaccinated, with exceptions made for medical and religious/conscience reasons. However, that's not the same as mandating inoculation.

As of this writing, there is no law proposed by any federal, provincial or territorial government mandating inoculation. So no law, but massive interest in an imaginary law.