

NEWS

Moderna's COVID-19 vaccine could be in Canada this month, Justin Trudeau says

By Jacques Gallant Legal Affairs Reporter

Tuesday, December 15, 2020

A game-changing COVID-19 vaccine that can quickly be put to use in long-term-care homes and remote regions could arrive in Canada this month if it gets regulatory approval, Prime Minister Justin Trudeau said Tuesday.

As the second COVID-19 vaccine authorized for use in Canada, the Moderna vaccine could be more easily transported than the Pfizer-BioNTech vaccine that's currently in use. It is stored at just -20C, while the Pfizer vaccine requires storage in ultracold freezers that reach -70C.