Here's an update on COVID-19 cases in Ontario as well as in the greater Kawarthas region.

Today, Ontario is reporting 1,076 new cases. However, this total includes only 361 new cases for Toronto, due to a data error from Toronto Public Health's migration to Ontario's Contact and Case Management system. Toronto Public Health's actual case count for February 11 as reported on its website is 546, meaning the actual provincial case count today would be 1,261.

Today's new cases include 39 more cases of the more contagious B.1.1.7 UK variant. The seven-day average of new cases has decreased by 84 to 1,189, although this average is based on the under-reported case count in Toronto.
