

Spence for quite some time, so when one career came to a halt, he dove into a new venture, spending his life savings and over three months developing his app, Kawartha Delivers, for his new business.

Now, when hunger strikes in the Kawartha Lakes, delivery options have expanded from pizza or... pizza. Spence and his team can deliver endless options to satisfy any craving, any time.

"I saw there was a definite need for this type of business in this area," said Spence.

Kawartha Delivers has partnered with a wide range of restaurants as well as the Beer and Liquor Store. The company boasts its own app that can be downloaded for free. The app features every menu available and makes the process of ordering quick and simple.

"I believe the app is the only way to go, it's the future," said Spence.

For repeat customer, Michelle Roitz of Bobcaygeon, Spence, his team and the Kawartha Delivers app has been a game-changer for her family.

"He's a great young man and I think he opened in a perfect storm. I think he will do really well. I order food and it's so convenient, until now, we only got pizza," she said. "He's got a fairly good coverage area, he does curbside and we wave, and it's all paid for through the app, it's just so easy now. He delivers to my office too, the app knows where my office is and my home, bingo and it arrives."

Roitz has been blown away by the app and how smoothly the business runs. With menus, payment and locations all done in
