

the app, the process is seamless.

“I don’t know how he did it but it’s pretty great, I’m happy for him, we’ve never had a service like this around here, I am so impressed by the app,” she said. “I just think the app is so cool, you don’t have to go to the restaurants website, all the menus are on this thing. He has created a perfect storm.”

Kawartha Delivers is based out of Bobcaygeon and they have a 55-kilometre radius, one way from each restaurant and Spence is hopeful that the business will greatly expand into other parts of the City of Kawartha Lakes.

And shortly after launching the business, Spence and his team paired up with local restaurants, eggsmart, Daylight Diner, Graz and Che Figata, to help the community by delivering free, delicious meals to front-line workers during the pandemic.

“We all came together, I said I’ll do the deliveries, they didn’t want money for it (the meals), they all went above and beyond,” said Spence.

Over approximately two weeks, the joint initiative delivered about 85 meals to front line workers at local long-term care and retirement homes.

“These people have really been taking the blunt end of this pandemic, we are all suffering, but these guys have had a real rough go,” he added. “It’s nice to be able to do stuff like that. Our partners jumped at the idea.”

According to Roberto Mangoni, Owner of Che Figata in Bobcaygeon, joining forces with Kawartha Delivers has been a positive experience. Che Figata was also one of the local restaurants that took part in offering free meals to front line workers. For Mangoni, he was ecstatic to be part of the
