The pretty little Congregational Church at Western Springs was dedicated last Sunday afternoon. The services began early in the morning and lasted throughout the entire day. The dedicatory services proper were conducted in the afternoon, beginning at 3 o'clock and not closing until nearly sunset. The pulpit was elaborately decorated with June roses and palms and the reading desk bore many bunches of summer flowers. The music was sung by a choir composed Mrs. George Burington, Mrs. George L Cornell, F. D. Titsworth and H. L. Cornell, under the leadership of C. H. Perry. The dedicatory sermon was delivered by Rev. H. A. Bushnell, of the Congregational Church at LaGrange.

The increasing number of funerals held at night marks a noteworthy change of custom. The service is arranged for a home or in the church, or even at the undertaker's, and, as the burial takes place privately next morning, there is no occasion for pall-bearers, and there is great diminution both of display and ex pense. So many people belong now to benefit societies or other organizations which both contribute to the cost funerals and attend them, either by deputation or in a body, that the saving of time and wages by this method is

Furthermore, anything which lessens the cost of funerals, especially for persons of moderate means, is to be commended. They have grown to be so expensive that, as some one has remarked a poor man cannot afford to die. Widows and orphans often have seriously diminished their scanty resources to furnish what is considered a suitable funeral for the breadwinner taken from them, and fathers have often crippled themselves similarly for months, pinching the living children order to bury the dead child in state. large part of the expense would be saved if the service were a service only, without pallbearers and with no long procession to the grave. It would be well if the rich would help to lessen the burdens of the poor by setting the fashion of funeral services without display, and of private interment invariably.-Congregationalist
