(CHAPTER L-CONTINUED). is unreasonable," she said, "though not quite in the way you mean. You had, I am sure, no thought but to honor me, and I thank you in all sincerity for your homage. But you have acted in this without due considera-

He would have spoken, but she raised her hand to check him.

"-you did not reflect that we have not, between us, all that should go to the making of a marriage. You have a man's strength and faith, an honorable name, a career of promise—it is much to bring; I have beauty, wealth, and a high spirit; these, too, perhaps, are worth something; you love me, and there is, I dare be sworn, no reason why I should not love you. But where in all this is the string that binds the posy together-where is the guarantee of our tranguil and continued friendship afterward? I sometimes think," she conthued, "that an intimacy of a lifetime ts scarcely enough to warrant such a risk; and you and I have but a yesterday's acquaintance on which to found such perilous hopes."

He raised his head. "I have known | er be walking the deck of a frigate than you for three months," he said, "and all | the pavement of Whitehall." of that time I have thought of nothing else on earth."

"All that time in truth," she answered; "but of what have you been thinking in the thirty years before? I do not know. I have ridden and dance I with you, I have sung and laughed with you: I know your favorite actor and the minister in whom you believe: but of yourself how little!"

"I am afraid there is little more to know," he said. "I am like most other men. But if you would set my great love against my deficiencies the scales might not weigh so uneven as with

"I believe sincerely," she replied, "that you love me-as you know me but I fear I cannot say, like you, that I am of the common type of my sex: my beliefs, my hopes, my work in life are all singular; the very circumstances of my birth and nationality are unusual though you hear it now for the first time. So, Capt. Estcourt," she confinued, rising to her feet, "you see that in your haste you have asked a woman to become your wife who, for all that you know, has nothing in common with you but the lighter feelings and more Irivial interests of life." He bent his head and said nothing for a time. She looked at him a little remorsefully.

"Is it good-by, then?" he said, slowly. like a man awaking from sleep. She reflected, looking downward in

"I will grant you this," she said, "and remember that it is no more and no less than I would do for any man of honor.

will make no change for what has bappened to-night; I will meet you, if chance so orders it, upon the old terms; but you shall promise me one thing in return." She paused for his assent. "I promise blindfold," he said, "for the first time in my life." She nodded approval. "Then I have your word," she said, "that you too will make no change in your career; that you will follow your fortune whereever and whenever it calls you without allowing thoughts of me to hold you

"It is hard," he said, "for I have towight been promised an immediate com-

"But you have given me your word." She held out her hand to him as she poke; he stooped and kissed it in si-

"Come," she said, "I hear the music beginning; this is my last dance."

They passed down the staircase without another word, and entered the ballroom once more. To Estcourt the dance was even more of a dream than the first one had been. To the thrilling influence of her beauty and her touch there was added that regretful consciousness of the inevitable end which makes the peaceful melancholy of autumn and gives the last perfection of pathos to the deep eyes of passion.

If he had felt himself favored of the gods before, he was now conscious, in his exalted state, of an even greater dignity—that given by the heroic endurnce of a great misfortune. Among the phantoms that flitted around him. ring of their unreal joys, he moved a kind of funereal triumph, as one with the grandeur of a tragic doom upim. The whirling dance was the and of eternity, and the music filled with exquisite sadness.

But now the measure rose sobbing to final eestasy, and lapsed again, and d slowly away upon a single note He found himself standing by the door. the colonel's bland figure in front f you will pardon me," the latte saying. 'It is time for me to take aister in law home; unless," he conwith a courteous gesture, "you free to enjoy that privilege your ed to his partner moment highly aggressive they delibt think of it," she said erately blocked his path. Capt Estcourt will attend get your hat and cloak er his arm; the colonel appeared. In three min-At first he was rather amused than apprehensive, and addressed them in a tone of good-humored remonstrance "Come, lads," he said, 'let me pass; I'm on business, and have no time to spare," and he pushed boldly forward. The crowd swayed about, yelling and hooting derisively, and with a rush of half playful, half feroclous violence he stood at bay, uncertain whether to try persuasion or such force as he could bring into play.

"God save Oireland!" howled the leader, who stood directly in front of him, and seemed to be in a paroxysm of unexplained excitement; "God save ould Oireland!"

"Certainly," said Dick, promptly, hoping that he saw here a chance of conciliating them. "With all my heart," he shouted, "God save Ireland!"

"Hurro for the Imperor Napolyun!" shricked his tormentor, striking the ground with his stick and capering like a maniac. Dick shrugged his shoulders and assumed a passive attitude.

"Hurroo for the Imperor Napolyun!" the Irishman, screaming in his face. "Say ut, ye murdherin divvle of a king's orficer; say ut, or I'll tear thim goolden shtraps from yer dirrty shouldhers!"

Dick drew himself together, clenched his fists, threw back his head, and raised himself to look for the thinnest part of the crowd. At that moment a carriage and pair was quickly making its way down the other side of the broad road, which had been left bare in part by the concentration of the mob around their victim. He recognized his chance and struck for it with all his force. He was not armed even with a stick, but in a flash his two nearest antagonists had gone down before his fists and he was half way to the carriage, fighting his way desperately through a storm of confused blows and shouts. Once he fell, and rose again without his hat; a second time he was beaten to his knees, in the act of laying his hand upon the side of the carriage, which had now stopped, and in which he was dimly conscious that a lady was standing upright.

House. There he found a large and fashionable crowd of visitors upon the himself, and spent the g.eater part of a short stay in talking to strangers.

same errand

But when he rose to go, Lord Glamorgan, who had been keeping him in view while hobnobbing with a couple of under-secretaries, crossed the room quickly and caught him as he turned away from taking leave of his hostess.

Estcourt saw by the twinkle in his eye that the genial old nobleman was in his own opinion the bearer of good news, but he shuddered inwardly at the sudden recollection of his promise so

"Dick," said his lordship, taking him under the arm and leading him toward a corner of the room, "I've been doing what little I can for you, and I only wish it were more. Compton tells me that the Favorite is almost ready for sea; she's only a thirty-two, but she's the last ship to be commissioned for ever so long, and I thought you'd rath-

Dick forced himself to return thanks

In terms of suitable fervor. "This is too kind of you. Lord Glamorgan," he said, with unintentional irony. "I could really wish that you had not taken so much trouble for me; I do not know what I

"Nonsense, my boy," said the old man, kindly; "I owe your father's son more than that, and I'll pay it, too, if ever we get our turn again. But now, he continued, returning to a more matter-of-fact tone, "if I were you, as this is your last chance for the present, I'd go down to the admiralty to-morrow

-not too late, remember, it's Saturday -and just make, as it were, a casual inquiry whether they've received your application all in due form, or something of that kind; jog them up at the right moment, d'ye see? That's it that's it!" he concluded, shaking Dick's Dick escaped at last and hurried back to his lodging without any clear idea of where he was going. What was it he had promised Madame de Montaut? He remembered but too well the very

You will follow your fortune wherever and whenever it may call you." The bargain was but two days old, and here already, with grim mockery, the call had come to the cheery tones of his well-meaning old patron's voice. And for what price had he thus sold his birthright of freewill? For permission to meet one from whom he would soon be separated by a thousand miles of ocean, and perhaps by the wider gulf of many years; for a concession which his own pledge had rendered valueless vantage from it. If ever man entered into a one-sided bargain, surely this.

Should he give himself the vain consolation of seeing her? He felt instinc tively that it would be better to deny himself until all had been done. But he could sit still no longer; he rose from table, leaving half his meal untouched and set himself to think over his visit

He decided at once that he would not trust himself to make his inquiry by word of mouth; he might say too much or two little, or betray some noticeable sign of agitation—a thought from which he always shrank by nature, and never more than now. No, he would write a Next morning he dressed himself carefully in uniform, and started out shortly before noon with the letter in his pocket. He crossed Oxford street and made for the straight line of St Andrew's street and St. Martin's lane

But just before reaching the latter he found himself face to face with a crowd which blocked the entire width of the thoroughfare. It was composed of wild and motley collection of men, women and children, accompanied by un couth music, and fantastically adorned with bunches of green ribbon, whose freshness threw into more hideous prominence the universal squalor of

At the head of this strange procession marched, in a body rather more compact than the rest, a dozen or two of men whose dress and features marked them even more clearly than their companions for thoroughbred Irishmen. They were apparently, in some sort, under the leadership of a tall rufflan with high cheek bones, a wide mouth, and large side whiskers of a flaming red color, and as they came along they shouted, and waved their sticks wildly above their heads with no

The few occupants of the street fled into their houses or up the neighboring by-ways. Estcourt contented himself with drawing to one side, with the in tention of passing along under the wall or of waiting there until the densest part of the crowd should have gone by

But his uniform made it impossible for him to escape thus without notice, and the temper of the mob being at the apparent provocation.

their clothing and appearance.

letter and present it in person.

he bitterly felt, was one.

to the admiralty next day before he could reap the slightest ad-have done to deserve it."

lately made.

She opened the door and stepped quickly out. The crowd fell back a little, and she began to speak.

Dick scrambled to his feet, still holding on to the side of the carriage, and stood looking at half-stunned condition of dull astonishment. Her face and form were those of Camilla de Montaut, but her speech and manner were strange to him and produced upon his confused senses all the effect of an incongruous

"Whisht bhoys!" she said; "tell me now what is't ye're afther here?" There was silence for a moment, "It's St. Pathrick's Day," said a voice at

"It is so," said the lady, readily, "or why would I be wearing shamrock?" and she took a small bunch of green leaves from her dress and held them up.

"But that's no reason at all," she went on, vivaciously, "why ye should be afther murdherin' me frens, and me the daughther of Anthony Donoghue." The crowd showed a tendency to shuffle back and get behind one another. A ragged youth, who found himself left without support in the front rank, took off his cap respectfully. "Shure, 'twas none of us at all, me leddy," he said; "twas only Tim O'Halloran that ast would his honor be plazed to say hurroo for the imperor, and he "Would be not?" said the lady, with an irresistible air of drollery; "thin it's mesilf that'll do ut for 'um. Hurroo for the emperor." she cried, heartily; "and whin he comes back to his own may I be there to give him the cead millia falta." She turned to Dick, pointed to the open door of the carriage, and jumped in behind him. The mob were cheering wildly all around; one or two of the nearest of them were taking the opportunity to beg a trifle of her lady-

"Drive on" she cried to the coachman. And in a moment they were whirling southward down St. Martin's lane in safety.

Dick, without knowing quite why he did so, had placed himself on the back seat of the carriage, and now sat look ing at his companion. Yes, beyond doubt it was Camilla herself, and when she spoke to him it was this time in her own familiar tones.

"I am afraid I was just too late," she said: "you are hurt."

"It is nothing," he said, slowly, H. was holding his hat, which some one had thrust into his hand as they drove off; he put it on his head and winced a little involuntarily. Camilla saw that he was hardly yet himself and wondered "Where can I take you?" she asked,

"Whitehall," he replied with an effort. His head dropped back against the cushion, and his eyes closed.

(TO BE CONTINUED.

A CAT UP A TREE

A singular request was made to Chief of Police Willard yesterday. A woman who lives in the neighborhoodhood of 169 Hamilton street called up police headquarters, and this is the conversation that followed "Hello! Is this police headquarters?"

"Yes." "Is Chief Willard in?"

"Yes; I'm the chief." "Well, chief, have you got a policeman who can climb a tree?" "Wh-what? A policeman who can climb a tree? For what purpose?" asked the chief, greatly surprised at the un-

"There's a cat up in a tree opposite 169 Hamilton street, and it has been up there for four days. All the women and girls are in hysterics over it, and wish something could be done about it. thought that you could send a policeman up to climb the tree and bring the poor cat down."

"I am afraid our policemen are not very good at the art of climbing, but I will see what I can do."

"Can't you get a fire department lad

"We'll attend to that all right." Captain Davidson sent a couple of his men to the tree where the eat was roost ing. Thomas was rescued, however and the hearts of all in the neighborood beat regularly again.

London, in 1894, had a population of 4.349.166, spread over 121 square miles. according to the recent report of the registrar-general an average of 37,250 to the square mile, and fifty-eight to the acre. The most densely populated districts are Whitechapel, with 196 to the acre, and Shoreditch, with 191. The death rate was 17.8 to 1,000, the lowest since a record has been kept. The highest death rate for the year in any English town was 23.8 in ? iverpool.

HAS A SILVER TONGUE.

SENATOR TILLMAN WILL STIR UP THE SENATE.

The Man Who Is Beloved by the "Poor White Trash" of the South Will Take the Reins of Leadership-He May Be a Presidential Candidate.

(Columbia, S. C., Correspondence.)

HIS ancient and pe culiar commonwealth is at this moment under the domination of the most notable and exasperating leader the South has produced since the war. With one or two exceptions he is actually dictating the terms of the new constitution to the convention that has been sitting in the famous old state house. Benjamin Ryan Tillman is the absolute ruler of the state, overriding all other authority and trampling down friends and foes alike when they oppose his will.

When Tillman enters the United States senate next winter that august body will receive a shock, for this is no sing-songy whiskerando like Mr. Peffer, but the incarnation of agricultural socialism armed with lightning that can blast and scarify. There is not a man on the floor of the senate today fit to cope with Tillman when his oration, who has smashed the saloon at bome. power, overthrown the heirs of the oldtime oliarchy of landed proprietors, for and debater in the country. His humbled the pride of cities and towns invectives bite to the bone. He can and sometimes furious sentences, brooking no contradiction and forgetting nothing that he ever learned.

The heat of the pine blaze injured his left eye, and an indiscreet plunge in cold water brought on a pulpy tumor. For nearly two years young Tillman was an invalid. When he was well again, the war was over and his eye was gone. From that time on he labored to improve his mind. He was an omnivorous student, reading without system, but gathering together an array of facts and ideas, ancient and modern, which astounds those who hear him in debate today. He was a great hunter and fisher. On the plantation he was "a steam engine in breeches."

Although he is the most remorseless enemy of negro suffrage in South Carolina, his whole history is full of acts of generosity towards his black farm la-

Before twenty he married, and he has now six children. One son is at Clemson Agricultural college, on the old Calhoun estate, to establish which the Senator made his first entry into public life, and his eldest daughter, Miss Adie Tillman, is studying at the Hollins institute, Virginia-a bright, pretty, highspirited girl. His son Henry, 12 years old, has inherited his father's extraordinary memory, and can tell you offhand any fact in the almanac, the names of congressmen and the majorities by which they were elected, how many gallons of liquor is consumed in the ecuntry, and how much money is in circulation.

Often when the flerce, ruthless leadtorical bowie knife is out. He thinks or returns from battle with his enein pictures and has a nimble wit. Even | mies, he lies down on the floor and in a aG,tK- dr. odgg. lower th F RFRFF minute his children are piled on top of the unterrified John James Ingalls him, pulling his hair, pinching his would have a hard time of it with this cheeks, and searching his pockets. one-eyed leader of the agrarian revolu- Like all really strong men, he is gentle

There is not a more remarkable ora-

There was a correspondence in the papers some time ago about the cruelty of leaving servants alone in town houses while the family is away at the sea. A curious commentary on the matter has just been supplied by Evelyn's cook, says girl's gossip in Truth. Evelyn left her in town for a fortnight, quite alone. but told her she could have a friend to tea when she liked, and added: "My mother's cook is a very nice, superior woman, and I will ask her to come round and have a cup of tea with you." After the fortnight the woman was very disagreeable and huffy-so much so that Evelyn told her that she could not keep her unless she could manage to be rather pleasanter. "What has upset you?" she asked. Whereupon, among other grievances, the cook said, "You asked your mother's servant to come here for no other reason than to keep watch on me." So the very thing that was kindly meant was converted into an insult. It only goes to prove that we shall never understand servants, try as we may.

Thought She Was Watched.

Inexcusable Neglect.

Great Editor—We have no longer any use for your services, sir. Brightwitz-Eh? You said that the article that I had in the paper yesterday was the best thing you'd ever published. Great Editor-Yes, but you neglected to write a lot of letters from old subscribers and general readers, praising the article as a brilliant example of this great paper's enterprise. A pretty sort of a nineteenth century, fin de siecle, metropolitan journalist you are!

A man who is rated as smart in good luck, is often rated a fool in adversity.

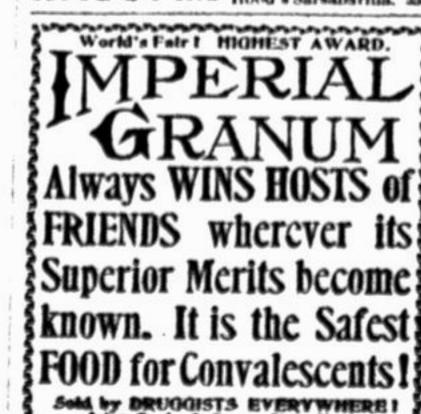

It is a Pleasure

To recommend Hood's Sarsaparilla to all afflicted with blood or skin diseases. My blood was out of order, and I suffered for years from psoriasis. I tried several remedies without benefit. After taking Hood's Sarsaparilla for two months I was restored to my former good health and feel like a different person. As a blood purifler I think Hood's Sarsaparilla has no equal." CHAS. L. COCKELREAS, Irving, Illinois.

Hood's Pills act harmoniously with Hood's Sarsaparilla. 20.

John Carle & Sons, New York. Doses of D'Hobb's will relieve

Pains in your Back, Sides, Muscles, Joints, Head, etc. and all Kidney Troubles: Rheumatism, Gout, Anaemia, and other Blood

Troubles, caused by sick kidneys. A few boxes wil cure. All druggists, or mailed postpaid for 50c, per box. Write for pamphlet.

HOBB'S MEDICINE CO. San Francisco,

y. If you prefer to come here we will tract to pay railroad fareand botal bills, and nocharge, if we fail to cure. If you have taken mercury, lodide potash, and still have aches and pains, Musque Patches in mouth, Sore Throat, Pimples, Copper Colored Spota, Ulcers on any part of the body, Hair or Eyebrows falling out, it is this Secondary BLOOD POISON we guarantee to cure. We solicit the most obstinate cases and challenge the world for a case we cannot cure. This disease has always baffied the skill of the most eminent physicians. $500,000 capital behind our unconditional guaranty. Absolute proofs sent scaled on application. Address COOK REMEDY CO., 807 Masonic Temple, CHICAGO, ILL.

and let loose seas of reckless rhetoric, I turn and twist around corners with engulfing the traditions of South Carelina in a flood of Greek, Latin, slang, profanity, crankiness and common sense. He towers up in the South. The sergeant-at-arms of the senate has my sympathy, but the senate itself has a stirring experience in store for it. The Tillmans of this generation have mostly died in their boots. One of the senator's brothers was killed in the Mexican war, another died from wounds received in the battle of Chickamauga and two others were shot dead in personal encounters. The whole family is high strung and full of grit. "Uncle" George Tillman, who served in congress for fourteen years, was actually turned out of his seat for daring to oppose the will of his younger brother. Today you may see the two brothers grappling with each other in this curious convention, which has met chiefly to provide for the permanent disfranchisement of the negro race and to recognize the socialistic principle of state ownership of saloons in the constitution.

PROFILE VIEW OF TILLMAN.

Senator Benjamin Ryan Tillman was year. Already silver men have menborn forty-eight years ago on his tioned the combination Tillman and father's plantation at Chester, at Edge- Teller, Tillman and Harvey, Harvey field county, S. C. Shortly afterwards and Tillman, Teller, and Tillman and his father died, and his mother, assisted | many others with the name of Tillman by her elder sons, conducted the hilly included. Should be be the nominee cotton farm on the edge of Chevis on such a union ticket, Tillman be-Creek. They had a hundred slaves lieves that he could be elected. He when the war broke out. Mrs. Till- | believes that he is the son of destiny, man was an intelligent, not to say | that he is doing God's work, that he brilliant, woman, for a plain planter's will not only kill the rum power in wife. During the war young Tillman | South Carolina, but all over the counwent to school at Liberty Hill, thirty | try as well. miles from home, under the tutelage of George Dolphin, a teacher and linguist of local renown. his indomitable will were displayed in has no leaders and practically no polihis fifteenth year. He knew that at | cy except the annihilation of Tillman, sixteen he must enter the Confederate But the end of Tillman may be very army. His brothers, then serving in near. He declares that South Carolina the field, wrote back, urging him to get a good foundation of knowledge, for the war might last so long that he would never have another opportunity for education. When school hours were over, and supper was eaten, young Tillman would carry a lighted pine knot into the woods and, lying down in the leafy solftude, would ponder over Greek roots and Latin conjugations by the dim, flickering light. He was a lank, sinewy, silent and dictatorial youth, expressing his pinion in short, sharp vileness for wit.

astonishing dexterity, deluding and confusing his opponents. He despises and ignores politicians, slashing and stabbing them indiscriminately, whether they support him or not. The secret of his power is his strong hold upon the mass of the white people. He is the god, the redeemer of the "poor whites." Nothing in heaven or earth escapes his vehement irreverence. He has an especial hatred and contempt for President Cleveland.

"When I get to the United States senate," he says, "I'll punch that old bag of beef in the ribs with my pitchfork and make him show up something about these Wall street deals."

Whereat enthusiastic hayseedism wags its head, sticks its tongue in its cheek and swears that Benamin Ryan Tillman is the mightiest man that lives, has lived, or ever will live. And they really believe it.

Tillman aspires to be president, All his hopes are centered in a union of the silver forces of all parties next

There you have Tillman summed up. But you really do not understand the man until you see him facing his ene-The lad's thirst for knowledge and mies in debate. The opposition to him will withdraw from the next national democratic convention unless the free coinage of siliver is agreed to. The results of such a course would be very painful to Tillman, politically speaking. But he is impetuous and headlong, in spite of his hard head. So oddly are some men fashioned.

> JAMES CREELMAN. Many people mistake stubbornness for bravery, meanness for economy, and