"Had" Courtwright has for some time been troubled with rheumatic twinges and among other remedies he was advised to carry a potato in his pocket. Soon afterward he appeared upon our streets wearing a large protuberance upon that portion of his anatomy generally occupied by the pistol pocket. Simultaneously with his appearance there was a demoralization of the provision market. "Up went the price of diamonds and even bread was dear," and as for potatoes, the luscious tubers were held at unheard of fabulous prices. Soon afterward the protuberance changed its position to the right hand side of Mr. Courtwright's frame and at about the position on the "femur" bone occupied by a side pocket of his coat. One day while the enthusiastic "Had" was discoursing to a homogenous multitude of "Downersites" on the virtues of the potato cure he pulled from his pocket about two pounds of the mealy vegetable. The market has now resumed its normal condition, "Had's" rheumatism is better and he is no longer hump-backed from carrying too much potato.
