

INTERNATIONAL PRESS ASSOCIATION.

CHAPTER XXIII.

the hand now ish his memory. pulseless in death.

to believe he had committed. She fell again on her knees and thanked God for that, Though lost to her it was a consolation ineffable to know that he had not taken the life of a fellow-mortal.

Her resolution was taken before morning. She had deeply wronged Archer Trevlyn, and she must go to fault, and plead for his forgiveness.

Castrani, who came in the morning, who was told the whole story, and listened with moist eyes, agreed with there both. So it happened that on the Colosses. ming morning Margie bade farewell the quiet home which had sheltered her through her bitterest sorrow, and New York.

She went to her own home first. Her aunt was in the country, but the servants gave her a warm welcome, and way to the residence of Archer Trevlyn, leak. but a few squares distant.

over the palatial mansion. The blinds dismal night, and every heart sank were closed-there was no sign of life plained dread ran through her frame as she touched the silver-handled bell. The servant who answered her summons seemed to partake of the strange, creased in the hold, and it soon became solemn quiet pervading everything.

"Is Mr. Trevlyn in?" she asked, trembling in spite of berself.

country, madam. "Left the country? When did he go?

"Some days ago." "Mrs. Trevlyn-take me to her! She was an old friend of mine."

The man looked at her curiously, hes New York stated a moment, and motioning her to enter, indicated the closed door of the parlor.

are a friend of the family."

shrouded in the gloom of almost utler lyn darkness.

eyes became accustomed to the gloom. | gic! Mine! Mine at last! The ocean and then she saw that the center of the has given you up to me!" room was occupied by a table, on which | "Oh, Archer, where have you been lay some rigid object strangely long it has been so weary' And I have want drapery of black velvet, looped up by you how I had wronged you that dying water lilics. strange awe. Margie stole along to the ever be guilty of that man's death table and lifted the massive cover. She if you knew all if you knew how art the pall, uttered a cry of horror, and you would not wonder-" sank upon a chair. The door unclosed noiselessly, and Mrs. Lec. the mother told me. My poor wife! God rest her of the dead woman, came in.

darling! My only child is taken from she is lead, and I will not be unforgivposed enough to give any explanation I was fool enough to credit her insinuaof the tragedy-for tragedy Margie felt tions. Margie, I want you to pardon sure it was.

The story can be told in a few brief words. Alexandrine and her busband I love him as I would a brother. had had some difficulty. Mrs. Lee herself for the part she had taken, of your sudden rejection of me. Philadelphia on business. He was ex- bitter remorse. We parted in anger. pected to be absent about four days. Margic, and she died without my for-Meanwhile his wife suffered agonies of giveness and blessing. It was very remorse, and counted the hours until hard, but perhaps at the last she did not his return should give her the privilege suffer. I will believe so." of throwing herself at his feet and begging his forgiveness. But he did not return. A week, ten very forgiving toward her." days passed, and still no tidings. Alex-; "I have forgiven her long ago. andrine was almost frantic. On the know the proofs were strong against eleventh day came a telegraphic dis- me. I am not sure but that they were patch, brief and cruel, as those heart- sufficient to have convicted me of murless things invariably are, informing | der in a court of law. You were conher that Mr. Trevlyn had closed his scious of my presence that night in the business in Philadelphia and was on graveyard, Margie?" the eve of leaving the country for an Yes. I thought it was you. I knew indefinite period. His destination was no other man's presence had the power not mentioned, and his unhappy wife, to thrill and impress me as yours did. feeling that if he left Philadelphia; "I meant to impress you, Margie. without her seeing him, all trace of brought all the strength of my will to him would be lost, hurried to the de- bear on that object. I said to myself, pot and set out for that city.

There had been an accident about yet my visible presence snall not be half way between New York and Phila- revealed to her. I had found out which delphia and Alexandrine had been was your window from one of the serbrought back to her splendid home-a vants, and I watched its light which corpse! That was all.

CHAPTER XXIV.

gie, outwardly calm at rest." and quiet, lived maiden aunt.

ever came of Archer Trevlyn. Margie AR into the night thought of him now as we think of one Margie sat reading being dead, with tender regret, and the closely written love almost reverent. He was dead to sheets, penned by her, she said, but it was no sin to cher-

In the third year Margie's aunt mar-All was made clear; ried. It was quite a little romance. An Archer Trevlyn was old lover, discarded years before in a exculpated. fit of girlish obstinacy, came back, after He was innocent of weary wanderings in search of hapthe crime which she piness, and seeking out the love of had been influenced other days, woord and won her over

There was a quiet wedding, and then the happy pair decided on a trip to Europe. And, of course, Margie must accompany them. At first she demurred; she took so little pleasure in anything, she feared her presence might mar their happiness, and she him with a full confession, confess her dreaded to leave the place where she had passed so many delightful hours with him. But her zunt and Doctor approved her decision, and Nurse Day, Elbert refused to give her up, and so, one beautiful September morning, they sailed for Liverpool in the good ship

For many days the voyage was prosperous, but in mid-ocean they fell upon stormy weather and the thip was tossed accompanied by Castrani set forth for about at the mercy of the winds and waters. It was a terrible storm, and great apprehensions were entertained that the vessel might founder, but she would doubtless have weathered the after resting for an hour, she took her blast in safety if the had not approag a

The fearful intelligence was an-A strange silence seemed to hang nounced just at the closing in of a dark , and every face was shrouled in gloom. about the premises. A thrill of unex- Only for a moment! The men sprang to the pumps and worked with a willor men will work for their lives but their efforts were vain. The water inevident that the Colossus would hardly keep affoat until morning.

But just when they were most help-"I believe Mr. Trevlyn has left the less, most despairing, the lights of a tetrange ship were seen. They succeeded in making their desperate condition known, and by day-dawn all were safe on board the steamer, for the stranger proved to be a steamer on her way to

The decks were crowded; Doctor Elbert was looking after his wife, and Margie, clinging to a rope, stood fright-"You can go in. I presume, as you ened and alone. Some one came to her, said a few words which the tempest A feeling of solemnity, which was made inaudible, and carried her below almost awe, stole over Margie as she The light of the cabin lamps fell full on turned the handle of the door and his face. She uttered a cry, for in that stepped inside the parlor. It was moment she recognized Archer Trev and still and angular -covered with a ed to see you so much - that I might tell might ask you to forgive me. Will you Still controlled by that feeling of pardon me for believing that you could saw beneath it the pale, dead face of fully it was represented to me-what Alexandrine Trevlyn. She dropped overwhelming proofs were presented.

"Margie Harrison!" he cried, his fin-Margie stopped by the Joor until her gers closing tightly over hers. "Mar-

"I do know all, Margie: Alexandrine She believed me gnilty and yet her "Oh. Margie! Margie!" she cried, fatal love for me overlooked the crime. "plty me! My heart is broken! My She deceived me in many things, but ing. She poisoned my mind with sus-It was long before the grew com- picions of you and Louis Castrani, and "I do, freely, Costrani is a noble son

"Continue to do so, Margie. He de could not tell in relation to what, but serves it. I think. The night I left home she knew that Alexan: Irine blamed Alexandrine revealed to me the cause Mr. Trevlyn left her in anger to go to quarreled terribly. I remember it with

"If she sinned it was through love of you, Archer, and that should make you she shall know that I am near her, and burned through the dusky twilight like the evening star. I wonder if you had a thought for me that night, Margie-HE summer days your wedding night?"

brought the au- and hid her face on his shoulder-"I tumn mellowness did think of you. I longed inexpressiand splendor. Mar- bly to fly to your side and be forever

"My darling!" he kissed her fondly at Harrison Park and went on: "I saw you leave your room by the window and come down the garden path. I had felt that you A year passed would come. I was not surprised that away thus mono- you did. I had expected it. I followed hen enother, and no tidings you silently, saw you kneel by the grave

Margle?"

"Yes." "You recognized me then? I meant you should. After that I hurried away. I was afraid to trust myself near you longer, lest I might be tempted to what I might repent. I fled away from the place and knew nothing of the fearful deed done there until the papers announced it next day."

"And I suspected you of the crime! O. Archer! Archer! how could I ever have been so blind? How can you ever forgive me."

"I want forgiveness, Margie, I doubted you. I thought you were false to me, and had fled with Castrani. That unfortunate glove confirmed you, I suppose. I dropped it in my haste to afterward I expected to hear of it in connection with the finding of Linmere's body. I never knew what became of it until my wife displayed it, that day when she taunted me with my crime. Poor Alexandrine! She had the misfortune to love me, and after your renunciation, and your departure from New York-in those days when I deemed you false and fair-I offered her my hand. I thought perhaps she might be happier as my wife, and I felt that I owed her something for her devoted love. I tried to ao my duty by her, but a man never can do that by his wife, unless he loves her."

"You acted for what you thought was best, Archer."

"I did. Heaven knows I did. She died in coming to me to ask my forgiveness for the taunting words she had spoken at our last parting. I was cruel. went away from her in pride and auger, and left behind me no means by which she could communicate with me. Ceserved to suffer, and I have."

"And I also, Archer." "My poor Margie! Do you know, dear, that it was the knowledge that you wanted me which was sending me home again? A month ago I saw Louis Castrani in Paris. He told me everything. He was delicate enough about it, darling: you need not blush for fear he might have told me you were grieving for me; but he made me understand that my future might not be so dark as had begun to regard it. He read to me the dying confession of Arabel Vere, and made clear many thing, regarding which I had previously been in the dark. Is all peace between us, Margie?"

"All is peace, Archer. And God is very good." "He is. I thank Him for it. And now want to ask one thing more. I am not quite satisfied." "Well?"

"Perhaps you will think it ill-timed now that we are surrounded by strangers, and our very lives perhaps in peril but I cannot wait. I have spent prelous moments enough in waiting. has been very long, Margie, since I heard you say you loved me, and I want to hear the words again." She looked up at him shyly.

"Archer, how do I know but you have changed?" "You know I have not. I have loved but one woman I shall love no other through time and eternity. And now, at last, after all the discress and the sorrow we have passed through, will you give me your promise to meet whatever else fortune and fate may have in store for us, by my side?"

She put her face up to his, and he kissed her lips.

"Yours always, Archer. I have never had one thought for any other." So a second time were Archer Trevlyn and Margie Harrison betrothed.

On the ensuing day the storm abated, and the steamer made a swift passage to New York Doctor and Mrs. Elbert were a little disappointed at the sudden termina tion of their bridal tour, but consoled themselves with the thought that they could try it over again in the spring.

Trevlyn remained in the city to adjust some business affairs which had suffered from his long absence, and Margie and her friends went up to her old home. He was to follow them thither on the ensuing day.

And so it happened that once more Margie sat in her old familiar chamber dressing for the coming of Archer Trevlyn. What should she put on She remembered the rose-colored dress she had laid away that dreadful night so long ago. But now the rose colored dreams had come back, why not wear the rose-colored dress?

To the unbounded horror of Florine she arrayed herself in the old-fashloned dress, and waited for her lover. And she had not long to wait. She heard his well-remembered step in the hall. and a moment after she was folded it there was a bridal at Harrison Park. The day was clear and cloudless-the balmy as the air of spring. Such Christmas had not the leafless trees. And Margie was married and not a cloud came between her and the sun.

CHAPTER XXV.

Peace and content dwelt with Archer Trevlyn and his wife in their beautiful home. Having suffered, they knew better how to be grateful for, and to appreciate the blessings at last bestowed upon them.

At their happy fireside there comes to wounded bitterns, or cranes-well, shook the hills and woke up the sit sometimes, of an evening, a quiet, scarcely.

Tyour parents, heard you call out upon | grave-faced man. A man who Archer your father for pity. O, how I loved Trevlyn and his wife love as a dear and pitied you, Margie-but my tongue | brother, and prize above all other was tied-I had no right to speak-but | earthly friends. And beside Louis Cas-I did kiss your hand. Did you know it, I traui. Leo sits, serene and contemplative, enjoying a green old age in peace and plenty. Castrani will never marry, but sometime in the hereafter, I think he will have his recompense. (THE END.)

THE BIGGEST POLICEMAN.

He Is Said to Be Philadelphia's Capt

Philadelphia has cause for civic pride in the possession of the biggest and strongest guardian of the public peace in the country over-Police Captain Edsays the Philadelphia Press. There may ! thyself to be another?" be heavier wearers of the blue uniform. but mere avoirdupois is not a thing to be proud of.

Capt. Malin measures in height 6 feet escape without your observation, and 6% inches. His weight is 200 pounds, has lived long enough to become very the shriveled arm of the paralytic; which makes him splendidly proportioned. Beside him the 6-foot 200pounder looks small enough to be coxswain of a university crew.

The labor of growing heavenward so tremendously has not taxed his brain and vitality, for Capt, Malin is strong and hardy, and when he shakes your hand warmly you think of the great steam hammer in the Krupp gun works at Essen. As for a hearty slap on the back, a timid man would prefer a tap from a trolley car.

Capt. Malin will have been connected with the police force of l'hiladelphia nineteen years on the 26th of next October and has passed through the several grades of duty from that of a "sub" patrolman to the responsible position of one of the five captaincies of the Philadelphia police departmentfrom "sub" to regular patrolman, to sergeant, to lieutenant, and to captain. His record has been an honorable one, and it goes without saying that Capt. Malin has had a comparatively peaceful career, although he has always been courageous and faithful to duty. But the most reckless lawbreaker or a syndicate of him would well hesitate to mix up in a personal encounter with a giant who would be more than likely to tuck the company under his arms and save the patrol wagon the trouble of carrying the victims of miguided confidence to the station.

He has been injured more than once in the performance of his duty, but, as the small boy said after the fight, "You ought to have seen the other chap." It is told of the big captain that when acting as lieutenant in the old police headquarters at Fifth and Chestnut streets, he was one day sitting by the door that led into the cellroom. Capt Malin was alone and was trying to read a newspaper. In one of the cells a man with a many horse-powered voice was shouting alound his yearning to get out and whip "anything with brass buttons on it."

"You got me in here when I was drunk and helpless. Now I'm sober and I can eat up any two coppers it the precinct. Only give me a show at them."

Lieut, Malin was patient until he deemed patience was a drug in the market. The bellicose prisoner was spoiling for blood. Nothing else would quiet him. The lieutenant sent for the failer and told him to open the cell door, and as the hinge grated the fighter flew into the roll-call room with an incandescent glow in his eyes. The lieutenant slowly rose from his chair until he was looking down at the prisoner far below. He said gently:

"Were you looking for something?"

"I-I I - thought I----" "Hadn't you better go back and keep quiet?" "Yes, sir; yes, sir. Don't hit me, please," and the war was averted by arbitration

Capt. Malin was born and "raised" on a farm near Gradyville, in Delaware county. He worked out of doors through his boyhood and didn't know what a cigarette was. Lots of work. sleep, fresh air, and healthful food made a man of him and gave him a famous start in life.

A DANGEROUS BIRD.

What Will Happen Some Day to an Incantious Hunter of Blue Herons.

"Some of these days," said the longshore hunter, "I expect to open my daily paper and see a headline something like this: 'Killed by a blue heron,' and I'll tell you why. The blue heron is a big, powerful bird which has already disfigured the faces of several men. The men have wounded a bird and then thinking to capture it alive they vent up to it. Why I'd as soon try to kiss a wounded grizzly. The birds grow as tall as six feet and have necks like a fish rod and just the kind of muscles to move it the quickest with the most strength. They could drive their bill points through a quarter-inch

"The hunter goes up to the bird and sees it lying there looking as innocent as a robin, with only a broken wing. 'What a fine pet it would make,' the fool hunter thinks. Then he picks the bird up and starts for home in a wagon or a boat, with the bird between his knees. The bird's neck is drawn back like a letter 'S.' All of a sudden the bill known for shoots up and gives the man a gash alongside the eye three inches long. The sun shone That is what always has happened. fied on and "I did think of you-" she blushed, brightly, and soft winds sighed through The wounded bird has missed its aim, but sometimes, and you want to remember it, this feathered spearman will drive its bill far into its enemy's eye, and like a steel umbrella stick the point of the bill will penetrate the man's brain. I guess the bird's aim has always been spoiled by the pain of its wounds, and so many a human life has been saved. I don't monkey with

Dr. Talmage's Sermon.

> ROYALTY IN DISGUISE...

Washington, Dec. 13, 1896.—In this and medicament. A sermon from a bible scene never used in sermonic discourse, Dr. Talmage pour his tears. D draws some startling lessons, and tears | know that occasionally his off the masque of deceit. The text is alty flashed out, as when in ward W. Malin of the Second division, I. Kings 14:6: "Why feignest thou on Galilee, as in the red wine

> boam there is a sick child, a very sick he turned a whole child. Medicines have failed: skill is into the net of the exhausted. Young Abijah, the prince, boatmen, as when he throbbed popular, and yet he must die unless for the most part he was in palace and swings back the door of the robe in his plain coat. No ing at the dying prince with the dart owned all the mansions in that his prayers would not be aning gold and gems, as she might have No one knew that the stars, only those gifts which seem to indicate | constellations that marched that she belongs to the peasantry-a few loaves of bread and a few crackness and a cruse of honey. Yonder she goes, hooded and veiled, the greatest lady in all the kingdom, yet passing unobserved. No one that meets her on the highway has any idea that she is the first lady in all the land. She is a queen in disguise. The fact is that Peter the Great, working in the dry docks of Saardam, the sallor's hat and the shipwright's axe gave him no more thorough disguise than the garb of the peasant woman gave to the queen of Tirzah. But the prophet of the Lord saw the deceit. Although his physical eyesight had failed, he was divinely illumined, and a one glance looked through the imposition, and he cried out: "Come in, thou wife of Jeroboam. Why feignest thou thyself to be another? I have evil tidings for thee. Get thee back to thy house, and when thy feet touch the gate of the city, the child shall die." She had a right to ask for the recovery of her son; she had no right to practice an imposition. Broken-hearted now, she started on the way, the tears falling on the dust of the road all the way from Shiloh to Tirzah. Broken-bearted now. she is not careful any more to hide her queenly gait and manner. True to the prophecy, the moment her feet touch the gate of the city, the child dies. As she goes in, the soul of the child goes out. The cry in the palace is joined by the lamentation of a nation, and as they carry good Abijah to his grave, the air is filled with the voice of eulogy for the departed youth, and the group of an

The story of the text impresses me with the fact that royalty sometimes passes in disguise. The frock, the vell, the bood of the peasant woman hid the queenly character of this woman of Tirzab. Nobody suspected that she was a queen or a princess as she passed by, but she was just as much a queen as though she stood in the palace, her robes incrusted with diamonds. And so all around about us there are princesses and queens whom the world does not recognize. They sit on no throne of royalty, they ride in no charlot, they elicit no huzza, they make no pretense, but by the grace of God they are princesses and they are queens. Sometimes in their poverty, sometimes in their self-denial, sometimes in their hard struggles of Christian service-God knows they are queens: the world does not recognize them. Royalty passing in diaguise. Kings without the crown, conquerors without the palm, empresses without the jewel. You saw her yesterday on the street. You saw nothing important in her appearance, but she is regnant over a vast realm of virtue and goodnessa realm vaster than Jeroboam ever looked at. You went down into the house of destitution and want and suffering. You saw the story of trial written on the wasted hand of the mother, on the pale cheeks of the children, on the empty bread-tray, on the fireless hearth, on the broken chair. You would not have given a dellar for all the furniture in the house. But by the grace of God she is a princess. The overseers of the poor come there and discuss the case and say, "It's a panper." They do not realize that God has burnished for her a crown, and that after she has got through the fatiguing fourney from Tirzeh to Shiloh and from Shiloh back to Tirzah, there will be a throne of royalty on which she shall rest forever. Glory velled. At fluence hidden. Eternal raptures hushed up. A queen in mask. A princess in But there was a grander disguising afflicted kingdom.

The favorite of a great house looked out of the window of his palace and he saw that the people were carrying heavy burdens, and that some of then were hobbling on crutches, and he saw some of them lying at the gate exhibiting their sores, and then he heard their lamentation, and he said: "I will just put on the clothes of those poor people and I will go down and see what their sorrows are, and I will sympathize with them, and I will be one of them, and I formation of the will help them." Well, the day came for him to start. The lords of the land sing joined in the parting song, whi erds. The first few nights he has sympathetic bo wedding banquet, as when he freed In the palace of wicked Jero- shackled demoniac of Gadaya. some supernatural did be afforded. No one saw the king's lewels in h Death comes up the broad stairs of the sandal. No one saw the roys sick room of royalty, and stands look- knew that that shelterless Chris uplifted. Wicked Jeroboam knows that the hierarchs of heaven had their hab he has no right to ask anything of the itation. None knew that that hun-Lord in the way of kindness. He knows | gered Christ owned all the city groves, and all the harvests which swered, and so he sends his wife on the shook their gold on the hills of Paldelicate and tender mission to the estine. No one knew that he who said prophet of the Lord in Shiloh. Put- "I thirst" poured the Euphrates out ting aside her royal attire, she puts on of his own chalice. No one knew that the garb of a peasant woman, and the ocean lay in the palm of his hand starts on the road. Instead of carry- like a dewdrop in the vase of a life carried from the palace, she carries moons, and suns, and galaxies, and after age, were, as compared with his lifetime, the sparkle of a firefly on summer night. No one knew that the sun in mid-heaven was only the sh ow of his throne. No one knew th his crown of universal dominion covered up with a bunch of th Omnipotence sheathed in a h body. Omniscience hidden in a hu man eye. Infinite love beating in human heart. Everlasting barmon subdued into a human voice. Royalt en masque. Grandeurs of heaven it earthly disguise.

My subject also impresses me with how precise and accurate and particular are God's providences. Just at the moment that woman entered the ci the child died. Just as it was pro sled, so it turned out, so it alway turns out. The event occurs, the de takes place, the nation is born, despotism is overthrown at the pointed time. God drives the unive with a stiff rein. Events do not happen so. Things do not shod. In all the book of God's p dences there is not one "If." providences are never caught in bille. To God there are no surp no disappointments and no a The most insignificant event fin in the ages is the co tween two great chains the eternity past and the chain of e to come. I am no fatalist, but I a be completely wretched if I did feel that all the affairs of my life in God's hand, and all that parts me and mine, just as certainly as the affairs of this woman of the t as this child of the text, as king of the text, were in O hand. You may ask me a hu questions I cannot answer, but I a until the day of my death believe the am under the unerring care of G and the heavens may fall, and world may burn, and the 1 may thunder, and eternal ages may roll, but not a hair shall fall from my head, not a shadow shall drop t my path, not a sorrow shall trans my heart without being divinely ranged—arranged by a loving, ay thetic Father. He bottles our tears catches our sorrows, and to the o he will be a Father, and to the W he will be a husband, and to the cast he will be a home, and to most miserable wretch that this da crawls up out of the ditch of his abo nation crying for mercy, he will b an all-pardoning God. The rocks shall turn gray with age, and the forest shall be unmoored in the last hurr cane, and the sun shall shut its fler yelld, and the stars shall drep blasted figs, and the continents a go down like anchors in the deep the ocean shall heave its last and lash itself with expiring and the world shall wrap itself in winding sheet of flame and least the funeral pyre of the judgment day but God's love shall not die. kindle its suns after all other have gone out. It will be a b sea after the last ocean has went self away. It will warm itself by the fire of a consuming world. sing while the archangel's tr pealing forth and the air is the crash of broken sepulchres rush of the wings of the rigins Oh, may God comfort all the with this Christian sentime

Seven Who Men's Su The sayings of the Seven are the famous mottoes the temple of Apollo at I Athens-"Know thyse Sparta-"Consider the Miletus Suretych men are bad." Cle Avoid excess." "Know thy opportunity of Corinth- Nothing is