WHEATON.

The city condemnation case came up for hearing in the county court, Monday, and after a few witnesses had testified, all parties concerned thought it best to settle the case, and by getting their heads close together the following was agreed upon: Geo. Hageman, $20; M. E. Jones, $125; Mrs. Michels, $336.12; Mrs. Sohmer, $616.50. Everybody seemed satisfied and South Railroad street will be widened forthwith.

There was a suit tried in the county court Tuesday that took the court, three lawyers and a jury all day to settle, and all over a dollar. The suit was brought by Allison Bank of Wayne against George Briggs for one dollar for wages. The jury gave a verdict for the plaintiff. The judgement and costs will cost Mr. Briggs several times the amount claimed, but he has had his fun and should now appeal his case. Gus has a voice like a steamboat captain, and the manner in which he hollered "whoa" to that horse stopped every home in the city but the one he wanted to. The several drivers got their borses started again when once more came the "whoa" from Gus' musical thorax and again every horse stood still. Butterfield's horse at last accounts was still going. - Illinoian.

The residents in the settlement endeavor to make friends first, and so the work is to a great extent non-sec tarian, and the "Commons" has become a rallying place for people of widely differing beliefs. Some of their best work is done in the educational line. Classes of workingmen and women have been formed in mathematics, French, German, grammar, history, social science and political economy and the advance made and interest taken in these studies is truly wonderful. Those wishing to learn more about the work will be heartily welcomed at 146 N. Union street. A visit to this settlement would undoubt-
