

CHAPTER XII.

Lady Felicie! are ter's grief. you here?" sob, a mouning cry, was his answer. He stooped down, lifted up the board flooring, and then arms, as he would have carried a helpless babe, descended the narrow Indder leading into the subterraneau chamber, which his forethought had provided. He laid her down on a narrow, but comfortable bed, and hurried back to close the door and replace the Sooring. That secured, he lighted a candle standing ready on the rude table, poured out a glass of wine, and approsched her.

"Try this first, and then tell me if wow are injured, dearest child." She looked up, pitifully into his face.

Emile, Emile, my mother is "bassi"

His face writhed in overmastering anguish. "I know it, my child; God help us! was powerless to prevent. I discovered that a body of men had left Frejus in that direction, and hurried after them. II I had only known this was to be wedding night, I should have been prepared. As it was, when I came, it was too late. We fought them desperntely, and drove them off for a timebut I believe it was a useless victory. Thought you were slain too, my child; was sure I saw your white face lying by the count's; but when I returnto the dreadful scene, I found no trace of you, only your torn veil. I forced that they had carried you off; but a wild hope also led me to seek rou here. Heaven be praised that you are spared!"

"Oh, my mother, my mother!" meanfelicle.

"Be comforted, my dear child, as there was no sign of violence, not single marring blow, the fright must have killed her. She is secure now from all these terrors which we are left e face."

"She has complained of her heart; smile, rus, I thank Heaven, their vile touch aid not send that pure soul to heaven," nurmured Lady Felicie, weeping piterealy; "ch, I am all alone, now."

"My child, you must be calm; I will try to be father and mother both-the love I bore the sainted dead, is doubly ours. Other perils are still about us, shall need your courage to help me." She wiped away her tears, and laid hard trustingly in his.

"I will do my best, mon pere Emile." He turned away to hide the tears. which came swelling into his eyes at these touching words, and said makily:

"I must go back to the chateau bebre that ruffian band return with engmented strength. We will secure waluables possible, that they may selleve we were there only for the sake plunder. And you will need clothmg; can you tell me where to find it?" She gave him brief directions, and sided anxiously:

"But if they return, and overpower we-what will become of me?"

"There is no danger. They must go Freing first; my men still hold the chategu. We are all masked, so they and recognize us; in an hour's time we shall be safely dispersed. I shall what is needed for you, for one manot tell how long they may keep here. The bodies are decently inwred in the garden, by this time. lave no fear of violence, and try to pare yourself more anguish than is mathle. You will be calm and padent while I leave you?"

"I will try. Will the light show?" "Oh, no: the ventilation comes brough the trunk of another hollow need be cautious about make: but light, not in the leastrea would be dreary enough in the

"Thank you; do not delay,

He left her to a two hours' solitude, but it was not so trying to bear as she seared. The extreme anguish and exeltement of the terrible scene breugh which she had passed had left her brain numb and torpid. Sitting hwn by the couch, with her head searing against the pillow, she dozed way the time, and started to her feet the vague alarm of sudden awakenher from sleep, when Emile again deseemded from the upper room. A roung man with a very pale face and evidently weak and suffering-who was dressed in a plain citizen's suit, ecompanied him. Emile at once ex-

"A friend of mine, mademoiselle, whathas got into difficulty with the sebiand he must be concealed, like-

She bowed, and looked compassionstely at the pale-featured youth.

"I hope I will not intrade upon the bey," observed the stranger in very weak accents; "if I were not so bewildered and helpless, I would try to and other shelter."

"Nay," answered Lady Felicie, carn-My; "I have stood too sorely in need of a friend myself, to be chary of my manathy for others."

"He enght to lie down at once; he received a very severe blow upon med. I am thankful there are two to the tree with a small trunk. estments to my den."

showed another small chamber. | din around the chateau."

He did not hint for whom he had pre-A DY FELICIE, pared it, to wound afresh the daugh-

"My men are bringing the needed A shuddering spoils from the chateau; I must go and bring them in, for I bade them leave all at the edge of the wood, not daring to trust even those brave fellows with the secret of this retreat. Can you, mademoiselle, bathe this poor suffertaking her in his er's head, while I am gone?"

And bending over her, he whispered "Do not betray your name and rank. He believes you to be a lowly born relative of mine; do not undeceive him."

Felicie obeyed him promptly. It was indeed a blessed relief from torturing thought to be doing anything. As the weary head sank feebly upon the pillow with a moan of anguish, she dipped the cloth into the ewer of water, standing near, and began bathing it tenderly. She shuddered as she parted the silky, brown hair, and saw the frightful contusion, where some terrible blow had fallen.

"He does not look like a peasant, so delicately featured, with such a refined look!" mused she. "I have never seen a finer face. It reminds me of some princely youth I have admired in pictures. Is it, indeed, to be proved through this reign of terror, to misguided France that her noblemen must be those of nature's dubbing only? Where will it end? and what will become of me, wretched child that I am, to have survived all that I hold dear ?"

The last words were unconsciously spoken aloud.

"Nay, dearest one," responded the voice of Emile, as he entered with his arms full. "If this world were all, you might have cause for despair; but when you remember that an angel mother waits for your approach to another and brighter world, surely you can pluck a rose even from the ashes of desolation; you are young, this world may yet afford you the sweetest and purest happiness. Be comforted, my child-be calm and courageous."

"I will, my noble, generous friend," answered Felicie, with the first feeble

CHAPTER XIII.

"I feared it," murmured Emile, apx-

FTER depositing his load, Emile turned to look a the suffering youth His eyes were closed, and a wan circle of deathly pallor was around the parted lips through which the breath came fit fully and hoarsely.

fousty; "he will have a tedious illness, at the very lightest. It is very unfortunate, as I hoped to get away before thegeneral rising. But he deserves our tenderest care; he is a noble youth. met him first one of those wild nights in Paris. The maddened crowd, surging back from the palace of the king. were maltreating a poor old priest, who had ventured to rebuke them. The young man, single-armed, without a weapon of any kind, sprang to the rescue of the poor wretch. I shall never forget the picture, as he stood in the middle of the street, the red torch-light flaring over his erect figure, placed before the priest as a shield. with his indignant, flashing eyes, his heroic, defiant bearing. My heart went out to him at once. For a moment, too, he held the crowd back-but, mon Dieu! there were some demented creatures who could have slaughtered ar innocent babe in its mother's arms without a scruple. With a yell they leaped upon him. Then it was my turn to step forward. I had some power then, and they yielded. So from that time, I have watched the gallant fellow, and never once has he disappointed my high expectations. What say you, Lady Felicie, shall we let him

"No, no," cried the girl, eagerly: "It shall be my task to nurse him back to Emile smiled quietly.

If it was much satisfaction to know she would have an interesting employment to keep her mind from brooding over her misfortunes, and to beguile the weary time he was wise enough not to mention it.

"But why do I waste the precious time?" exclaimed he, suddenly. must have everything safe below ground, ere that disappointed villain can return. He has met his deserts. Thirty kernels were placed on a board. for all the diamonds he hoped to secure | A squirrel carried them all away at have fallen into my possession. I need not assure you they will be saved for

"Why cannot I take the things at the door? It will save you much time, and the invalid is sound asleep."

"Perhaps it will be wise; the time is flying rapidly. Come then, and threw down the ladder, as fast as I bring the goods." She clambered after him to the upper round, and stood in the secret doorway watching him leaping away. He reher arms, and ran down with them, returning speedily for the others.

"The last, thank Heaven! and it is as he spoke, Emile removed a only just in time. They have returned at one end of the small room, with reinforcements; I hear a terrific mischief they can do-except-" "What? except what!" cried Felicie, frightened at the uneasy look on his face; "they will not desecrate the graves, surely?"

"I hope none of your friends are

"Oh, no; I charged them to disperse

as rapidly as possible; there is little

there?"

"They are fiendish enough for anything, but there is little to be gained by such a course. They have fired the chateau, Lady Felicie. Will you take a look at it, ere it falls, and not be distressed beyond my comforting?"

She caught her breath convulsively and stood a moment in shivering silence, then held out her hand to him. He had closed the door of the tree, and now took her hand tenderly, and led her forward to the edge of the

The stars had paled in sudden affright at the bright glare which rose up from the turbulent scene below.

The chateau was like one huge mansion carven in glowing carbuncle. Never had its symmetry and beauty struck Lady Felicle so forcibly as now when every arched window, and quaint gable, and doomed porch was framed in a burning line of dazzling flame.

It was so grand and beautiful sight, she forgot her personal interest in its fate, and with hushed breathing and entranced eye, she watched the huge sea of fire waver to and fro, as if playing with its victim; now sweeping a broad dash of red, seething flame across the lofty front, now rising up in one vast spiral column of dense smoke to the very sky.

All at once it wavered—the whole great building seemed to give one direful shudder at its fate, and gather itself up proudly to meet it. One brief instant Lady Felicie saw Languedoc chateau before her eyes, every line distinct, every arch perfect-the next it toppled, crumbled, disappeared.

She turned with a wild sob. Emile took her hand again, and without a word led her away toward

Between it and them rose up a dark

"Halt!" thundered a hoarse voice, "and let me know who it is watching the burning of the accursed nest of aristocrats with grief." Emile set his teeth hard upon his lip, and caught his companion up in his She uttered no single cry of alarm.

Already had she been taught the courage of desperation. He ran swiftly as was possible with such a burden, in the direction of the chateau, and gained the shelter of a thicket of trees; then as his pursuer dashed by them, he wheeled suddenly and made desperate efforts to reach the wood again.

He succeeded, and that was all; as the door of the hollow tree closed behind them, the flerce spy came stumbling along in the path.

Emile sat down his trembling companion, and put his ear to the side of the tree trunk.

A volley of oaths escaped the baffled wretch.

"They have cheated me again. swear it must be some of the royalists, or they would not have fled so desperately. I'll go back to Captain Pierre. and we'll search the whole ground over; there sha'n't be a bead left on one of their necks, if I can help it."

And muttering other inaudible anathemas, he went away again.

(. CONTINUED BE OT)

Perplexed About Chang

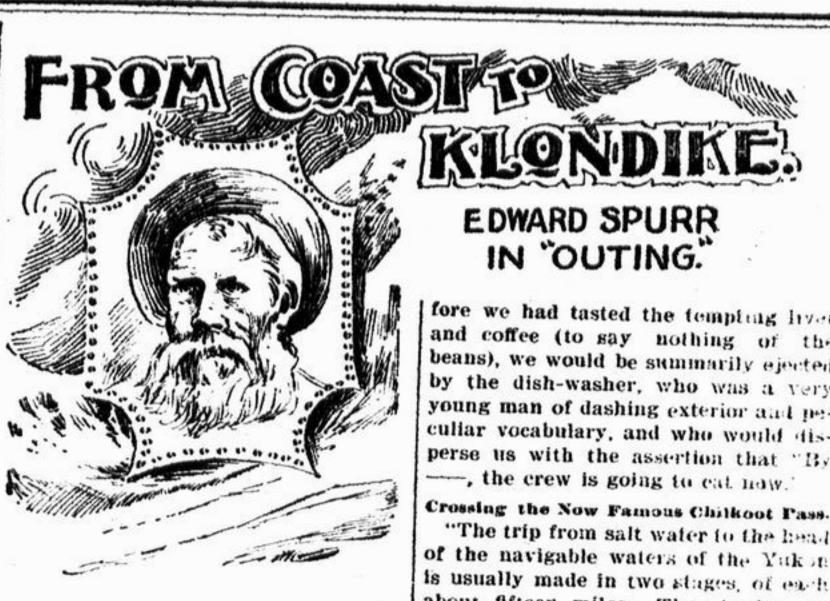

Coming down in a Twelfth street car. an old lady tendered the conductor a three-cent piece, under the impression that it was a dime, and received a nickel in change. The conductor, however, discovered his error immediately after, and, going back to the old lady, explained the circumstance. After convincing her with much argument that she had only given him three cents, the conductor returned the coin and the old lady handed him the nickel. "Let me have your fare, please," demanded the conductor. The old lady looked aghast. "Why, I just gave you five cents," she retorted, now firmly convinced that she was being buncoed. "Yes, I know," replied the conductor. who was also getting slightly twisted. "but that was the nickel I gave you in change for your three-cent piece," "Well, I paid you, didn't I?" remonstrated the old lady, "But that was the money I gave you." "Well, you've got it now, haven't you?" The conductor lasked the eloquence to explain the situation, and at Market street they were still haggling about it.-Philadelphia Record.

A Squirrel's Capacious Mouth. A Dummerston (Vt.) man wished to ascertain how many kernels of corn a chipmunk could carry in its mouth. one time. Forty-five kernels were then placed in position, and chippy got away with all of them at that trial. Seventy kernels were put on the board for a third trial. The little striped animal was beaten this time, but succeeded in carrying fifty-eight of the kernels in his mouth.—Boston Herald.

Johnny's Bad Humor.

"Johnny has been in a bad humor all the evening," said the worried mother when the head of the house turned laden heavily. Lady Felicie came home. "He has been crying more gathered the lightest of the goods in than an hour and refuses to be comforted." "He refuses to be aither comforted or blanketed," said the nurse, They worked steadily for nearly an | who had just come in. "He kicks the hour. Then Emile came dashing back | covers aff as fast as I put thim ahn him."-Indianapolis Journal.

> Freedom from want is not for the strongest lion, but it may be enjoyed by the weakent of the Lord's sheep.

The Famous Yukon River.

In Outing for September Edward Spurr, of the United States Geological Survey, speaks as follows of the great Alaskan river:

must either go to St. Michael, in the Yukon, from its outlet to the beginning of its headwaters, some 1,500 miles, or land at some point of the source.

"In either event the journey must be completed before September, when the Yukon freezes, and Alaska's arctic winter of the utmost rigor sets in and grips its vise.

the steamer and made preparations to turn our backs for good upon civiliza- tom we were thus traveling was narrow dried an in lighted at one end and tion. Our proposed route lay across the and canyon-like, with sleep but itself as a condle; and for this purpose coast mountains to the headwaters of mountains rising high on either with it is a real away against the long winthe Yukon and thence down that river | The tops of these mountains, and the contraction in the contraction of these mountains, and the contraction in the contraction of these mountains, and the contraction of these mountains. as a highway, making such excursions from it as became necessary.

for traveling, even in the only available each of the gulches or recesses in the autoproperty by perceiving a solishort season of its arctic summer, there being no roads; and even Indian trails, on account of the small number of natives, are very rare. The surface is rough, being traversed by many ranges of mountains. Even in the more level portions travel is hindered in the sum- place. mer by the wet moss which grows knee-deep, and by the insect pests; in the winter it is made impossible by the intense cold. In view of all these difficulties, the peculiar relation of the Yukon river to the coast is such that one might fancy Nature had arranged it especially for a highway, through this inaccessible interior, in partal compensation to man for the obstacles she has put in his way.

The headwaters of the network of streams that ultimately drain into the Yukon river fortunately lie within about thirty miles of the sea, just on the northern or inland side of a range of mountains which runs along the southern coast of Alaska. From this point the river flows north, away from the sea, far toward the Arctic Ocean; then, suddenly changing its mind, turns west; and finally, after traversing the whole width of Alaska, arrives at the Behring Sea, its entire course being considerably over two thousand miles, For a considerable distance it is a broad and deep stream, so that one may go quite through the center of Alaska. from sea to sea, by crossing only thirty miles or so of land.

There are various routes across the coast mountains to the various heads of this river. Of these we chose that over the Chilkoot Pass, which is the shortest, although the which must be thereby crossed are higher than any of the other routes.

Hardships of the Trip to the Klondike. "We were huddled together so closely that we perforce became speedily acquainted, for although the space of the floor was large enough for all of us to sit down, there was hardly room to stretch out. When we grew weary of chatting, however, and of listening to the sound of the water as the boat threshed its way onward, we were forced by drowsiness to sleep where we could, and soon sleepers were scattered around in the most grotesque and uncomfortable attitudes. I had coveted a space on or under the little table used for eating purposes, but found that choice position fully occupied before I made up my mind to retire: but I finally wedged myself into a narrow space between the boiler and the pilot house where, throughout the night, passers continually stepped on my head. However, I slept several hours,

The system of eating is worthy of note. The table accommodated about six at a time, whereas, as I have mentioned, we were fifty or sixty in all. At each meal one or two, or sometimes three, sets of passengers would be fed; then the captain, the sailors, the Chinese cook, and the dish-washer, after which the rest of us got our rations, in good time. As we grew very hungry during this process, we would stand around patiently waiting our chance to slip in; but sometimes be- imaginative drawings.

EDWARD SPURR IN "OUTING." fore we had tasted the templing liver and coffee (to say nothing of the beans), we would be summarily ejected by the dish-washer, who was a very young man of dashing exterior and peculiar vocabulary, and who would dis-

Crossing the Now Famous Chilkoot Pass. "The trip from salt water to the head of the navigable waters of the Yukon is usually made in two stages, of each about fifteen miles. The trader at Dyea had brought in a few horses, and we engaged him to transport our samp outfit and provisions over the first stage, where the trail, though rough "Only two routes are available. One | Some of the miners, however, engaged Indians immediately at Dyea to pack | silers their mode of life) are inferior Behring sea, and thence up the River | the whole distance, and, as it afterward | to the men in good looks. These woproved, this was the wiser plan W. mer. have a habit of painting their could also have obtained saddle out- faces uniformly black with a mixture mals, but our little party preferred to of soor and grease, a covering which is Pacific, cross the head of land and tap | walk for the sake of getting toughenest | said to prevent snow-blindness in the the headwaters of the Yukon at their for the harder journeys that were a vincer and to be a protection in sum-we could see, were capped with it. and this great glacier stretched at Arbough there are very few peo-"Alaska is a most difficult country long fingers down into the valley single in the manage one is continually mountain wall. Finally, crossing the tall waits tout standing on some promriver a last time on a fall n time or class point or cliff which overlooks followed the trail up into the processing the Ar first this looks cheerful, rocky and difficult portion of the act and you want many a hearty hail across ley; and some miles of this brought the water to such habitations; but our us, thoroughly tired, to our mairing this ware dever answered, for these

"From Sheep Camp, where we very lead, Inside each of these tents, the only way to get our supplies a contact have ordinarily made of white the pass was to get Indiana to our stork though sometimes of woven them. Although these Indiana are no that and a dead Indian, and near stronger than average white men yer him up this his rifle, snowshoes, ornathey greatly excel them in point it means and other personal effects. I do Y endurance, and they willingly united and thenk the custom of leaving these

After awhile the well-beaten trail faded to almost nothing, and at the same time the snow-slope became of excessive steepness. We were obliged to kick footholds for every step, on a surface so smooth and steep that a slip would have sent us sliding into depths which we could not see. Looking down it seemed a bottomless pit, shapeless and fathomless, in the eddying fog. On the other side of the summit a short but steep declivity led down to a small frozen lake, named by the miners Crater Lake, on account of the steep, crater-like walls which surround it on three sides. On one side, however, this wall opens out into a valley, through which a small stream runs; the lake is, therefore one of the ultimate sources of the Yukon, and it was with a feeling of relief that we stapped upon its frozen surface.

. The Chilkoot Indian Packers. "At Dyea is a small trading-post, kept by a white man, around which is gathered a village of Indians or Siwash, belonging to the Chilkoot tribe. They are by no means ill-looking people. can be gone over by pack animals. The men are strong and well-formed; the women maturally, when one conmer against the mosquitoes. Some "The trip turned cut to be exception - ; have only the upper part of their faces ally fatiguing, a large part of the medianted and the black part terminates tance being through sand and love in a stroight line, giving the effect of gravels in the bed of a stream where a haif-mash. At the time of our arit was impossible to find a firm footing | coal the Indians were engaged very "At the little town of Juneau we left | several times also we had to wall the little town of Juneau we left | several times also we had to wall the little town of Juneau we left | several times also we had to wall the little town of Juneau we left | several times also we had to wall the little town of Juneau we left | several times also we had to wall the little town of Juneau we left | several times also we had to wall the little town of Juneau we left | several times also we had to wall the little town of Juneau we left | several times also we had to wall the little town of Juneau we left | several times also we had to wall the little town of Juneau we left | several times also we had to wall the little town of Juneau we left | several times also we had to wall the little town of Juneau we left | several times also we had to wall the little town of Juneau we left | several times also we had to wall the little town of Juneau we left | several times also we had to wall the little town of Juneau we left | several times also we had to wall the little town of Juneau we left | several times also we had to wall the little town of Juneau we left | several times also we had to wall the little town of Juneau we left | several times also we had to wall the little town of Juneau we left | several times also we had to wall the little town of Juneau we left | several times also we had to wall the little town of Juneau we left | several times also we had to wall the little town of Juneau we left | several times also we had to wall the little town of Juneau we left | several times also we had to wall the little times also we had to wall the little town of Juneau we left | several times also we had to wall the little town of Juneau we left | several times also we had to wall the little times also we had the stream. The valley along whose boy fish. This dah is very oily, and when

tiraves of the Klondike.

are not divellings of the living but of

HIGH SUMMER IN THE CHILKOOT PASS.

go extreme fatigue for any limited attions at the graves implies any be At this time, however the trail was so bad, on account of the soft sun, that they concluded to strike for higher wages. This was the cause some little delay for us.

Once we saw the Siwash safely alart. ed with their packs, we set out our selves, at about 6 o'clock in the after noon. At this time of year the trip is usually timed by the Indians, so hat the deepest snow will be crossed between 12 o'clock at midnight and in the morning; for in these hours crust forms, which in daytime is soft ened by the warm sun. Our way soon led us on to a glacier-like field of snow which often sounded hollow to our feet as we trod, and at intervals we could hear the water rushing beneath The grade became steep, and the fog closed around us thickly, joining with the twilight of the Alaska June night to make a peculiar obscurity which gave things a weird, ghostly appear ance. As we toiled up the steep incline of hardened snow, those ahead of us looked like huge giants; while those on whom we looked down were ugly, sprawling dwarfs.

All the rest of the climb was over snow, the ascent being very steep, with cliffs on all sides, which loomed up gigantie and ghostly. It is impossible to describe the effect produced by these bare, jagged rocks rising out of the snow field, in the silence, the fog and the twilight. We were forcibly reminded of some of Dore's hed that they will be used by the dead . necessary to him in life-just as, among ourselves, articles which have have used by some dead friend are hen afaith laid aside and used no long.

DRIVING A BARGAIN WITH THE NATIVES.

A Ballot Box That Counts.

something novel in the way of voting murninery has recently been patented in England by Arthur E. Collins, city engineer of Norwich. The ballots are printed on stiff paper or card, bound up in books, each leaf being so perforated that it can be torn off like a check from its stub. The voter goes into a screened room, where he sees a row of boxes supported on a frame.

Each box bears the name and other insignla of a party or a candidate. conspicuous indicator points the voter to a slot in the box. Into this the ballot is thurst without any marking or folding, and after a few seconds it falls through to a glass box, into which all the other boxes discharge. An election official, on one side, and the voter on the other, can both see the ballot and be sure that it is all right; but the official cannot tell by which route it entered the glass-walled receptacle, and therefore cannot tell how the man has voted.

Just within the slot, in each ballot box there is an inked roller and some type, which print a number on the back of the ballot. These numbers run in succession. Consequently, they count each party's vote as it is cast. Both the type and the highest number on the ballots, finally taken out, record this, and, therefore, must agree when the polls close. Each ballot, after remaining an instant in the glass box for inspection, drops still further, and goes into a much bigger reservoir that is sealed.

Deaf-Mute Misers.

In the house of a deaf mute brother and sister, William and Julia Barnes, who have lived alone on a farm near Columbus, Mo., an investigation committee of neighbors found after the death of the brother at 77 years, money to the amount of $5,000 hidden about in all sorts of places.