People cheerfully patronized the case rack, and paid their money to throw balls at the bables and were rewarded for successful shots with choice perfectos. A dodging darkey was a mark for expert throwers, and dancing in the afternoon and evening, formed plenty of opportunities for a person to get separated from his money, and help along a good cause. Refreshment booths were provided, and liberally patronized by the hungry and thirsty picnickers.

Chief among the attractions of the afternoon, was the ball game between the Downers Grove club, and the Victors of Chicago. The Victors did not prove victorious, for the Farmers in a moment of forgetfulness, pounded out a sufficient number of runs to win seven inning game with case. No one need express astonishment at this feat by the locals, when it is understood that the Victors were far outclassed by the home team -- who were older, heavier, and more experienced. Notwithstanding this the youngsters played a clever game at times, but their poor hitting and numerous errors gave Downers the game score 18 to 8. The
