On Monday morning of last week Postmaster Bennitt of Plainfield, turned the postoffice over to his successor, after serving the government in that capacity just forty-one years to a day. His tenure since his first appointment has been practically consecutive and without vacation.
The Great Northern Theatre, Chicago which is undoubtedly the most popular playhouse in that city, is offering for the present an elaborate production of "The Village Postmaster," a comedy drama of rural coloring which has been delighting eastern theatre-goers and which has just concluded its third big engagement at New York, where it has played for 227 nights. The scenes of "The Village Postmaster" are laid in a little country town of New Hampshire and the action is supposed to occur in 1838 when Franklin Pierce was president. The characters are those which can be found in almost any New England town to-day as well as fifty years ago. Placing the time back fifty years ago, however, gives an opportunity for picturesque costuming and for stronger accentuation of rural peculiarities. A performance is given every evening with matinees on Sunday, Wednesday and Saturday. A special matinee will be given July 6th.
