ENCE THEY EXERT ON MUNICI-PAL PROGRESS.

of Improvement Societies-Need of

The advancement of the country vilage and the work of village improvement societies may rightly be classed among the timely topics of this decade, says W. F. McClure in the St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Those who have visited the more progressive hamlets will not dispute the statement that in some important respects the country borough may excel many cities of 8,000 to 10,000 inhabitants. In the case of public libraries it is a remarkable fact that scores of citles the existence of which dates, back a half century are yet without even a suitable room for public library purposes, while in villages of 600 and 800 inhabitants an adequate public library is housed in a suitable building devoted to its uses exclusively. The work of many village improvement societies, too, should put to shame the accomplishments of city councils and chambers of commerce in hundreds of American cities of the third and fourth class.

As an example with reference to village libraries Kingsville, in northeastern Ohio, is a township five miles square, one side of the square overlooking Lake Erie. Its population in the vicinity of its two little trade centers does not much exceed 700. One of the trade centers is known as South Kingsville and the one next to the lake as North Kingsville. Each has its school, its churches and its postoffice, besides a few small stores. At South Kingsville, in a shaded spot, is the littie public library. It is a frame structure, built at a cost of some $300 or $400. It is tastily arranged within and, best of all, is filled with sensible books. It is said that there are fully 4,000 volumes on the shelves, which number is twice the population of the township.

Although much of the progress of the country villages is due to village improvement societies, in this instance it is a separate object. Each year on the Fourth of July a celebration is held in front of the school building. The proceeds of all the lemonade, peanuts and meals on that day go to the library fund. Instead of spending their money with vendors in the larger cities not far distant the citizens pay it in this way lute a fund for their social betterment. The receipts from one Fourth of July day often run into hundreds of dollars and go a long way toward paying the expenses of the year. A B brarian is kept in attendance. The library is open both afternoon and even ing. The current magazines are always kept on the table. The library is not a memorial. It is not a gift. It is by the people and for the people.

In some states the legislation of some forty years ago was the means of furnishing a nucleus for the village Bearies of today. The state printed | Where Americans Fall Short of furnished a circulating library to each township, the school directors having charge of the books. But the work of village improvement ocieties consists in other than the educational pursuits. Its departments cover the planting of shade trees, the improvement of highways and building of sidewalks and the like. In Katonah many years ago-for Katonah is one of the pioneers in the matter of its riliage improvement society—the early morning hours would find the citizens engaged in laying sidewalks to the littie churches. Royal oaks were planted many years ago, and today they are monuments to the industry and public piritedness of the residents. Deer park, in the shape of a triangle, is much admired in Katonah today. It was one of the first accomplishments of the improvement society.

Trees were not only planted on the village streets, but were set out beside the country roads leading into the village. What Women Can Do In This Line When They Make Up Their Hinds. Last spring a woman who resides in Hyde Park, Chicago, actually talked an improvement society into existence. She is Mrs. Joseph Twyman, a prominent member of the Chicago Woman's club, and nobody can deny that she used her linguistic talents to good ad-

Mrs. Twyman has learned the value of well directed speech as a preliminary to equally well directed action. So Mrs. Twyman energetically and consistently "talked up" the "South Park Improvement association" until she talked it into actual being-not to say energetic and purposeful action. Men, women and children, university professors and local business men. residents and visitors, householders and dwellers have been drawn into the work of furthering the objects and interests of the association. A membership list of over fifty rewarded the first two weeks of enthusiastic effort; a large number of other admirers and adherents have been added since that

The streets, alleys and vacant lots of South Park, as of much of the Hyde Park region, had been for many months in a condition best described as indescribable. Dust, papers, garbage, debris of all kinds, have rendered them perpetually dingy and disgusting.

The election of a man as permanent esident of the association was one of the first particulars decided upon by the half dozen or so of energetic dirt disgusted South Park women who "put their heads together" in the beginning.

The establishment of permanent committees to see that the different departments of the work are properly carried on was also seen to be necessary at very early stage of the proceedings. The crowning point of usefulness and businesslike wisdom was felt to be attained with the simultaneous decision to engage a professional solicitor to gather to the fees and dues of the rapidly increasing members and to appoint a feminine inspector for every block taken under consideration and care.

"It needs a woman to look after this part of the work," these wise students of street, alley and vacant lot conditions unanimously decided; "only a woman can be depended upon to take pains to inspect and report to the proper authorities regularly and persistently."

In other words, the housekeeping and housecleaning instinct of the South Park women was called into public service for the sake of South Park cleanliness and improvement.

The result has been a vast improvement in the condition of the streets, and what the ladies of South Park have done is a hint to women folk in other localities where their services in a sim flar cause are sorely needed.

Mr. Ruckstuhl is unduly flattering.

People who go abroad and see what is, Berlin and other European towns come back with the idea that the benighted foreigners do some things better than we do. But as most Americans never go abroad they remain totally impervious to that notion. The model city at the St. Louis exposition would practically give our people a foreign tour. It would show them possibilities of which they have never dreamed, and, as they are naturally quick of apprehension, this lesson would soon bear fruit. As the Centennial exhibition at Philadelphia marked the end of the era of rep and horsehair furniture and the World's fair at Chicago transformed our monumental architecture, so the St. Louis exposition, with its model city, may be expected to bring on a new epoch in general municipal designing. We certainly need it. No single thing would add more to the comfort
