Engineman Throws the Throttle Wide Open When He Fools the Treatle

Hammond, Ind., dispatch: Nearly ive hundred passengers who aboard train No. 13 on the Wabash road narrowly escaped a wreck and death near Clark station. The train is known as the Buffalo limited, and reaches Chicago at 9:30 in the evening. Clark station is the crossing of the Wabash and the Fort Wayne railways, and is four miles east of this place.

A short distance out of Clark the Wabash crosses the Grand Calumet river over a huge trestlework bridge. Some repairs had been made on the structure only recently, and it was considered perfectly safe, track walkers having just patrolled the bridge before the Wabash limited left Clark station. As the train, having aboard nearly five hundred souls, reached the middle of the structure that spanned the Calumet the engineer heard the cracking of timbers as the middle span of the bridge sank beneath his engine. He opened the throttle to the farthest limit, and the train fairly leaped from the swaying trestlework.
