TONA DUNLAP ACQUITTED

Mystery In Aledo. Ill., Poisoning Case Still Unsolved-Prosecution In Recent Trial Did Not Prove a Motive.

Antoinette Dunlap was acquitted Jan. 3 at Aledo, Ill., of the charge of poisoning her thum, Allie Dool, by means of chocolates containing strychdine. The jurors worked over the testimony all of the night. On the first ballot they stood nine for acquittal and three for conviction. When the next ballot was taken there were four for conviction, and then the sentiment turned in her favor, and on the seventh ballot all were in favor of acquittal. Lack of motive was the strong point in bringing over the three men who at first voted for a verdict of guilty.

The verdict was a surprise to everybody, apparently, except to the defendant.

tell how happy I am to know that there is no disgrace resting upon the family and myself."

The acquittal of Miss Dunlap was due to the failure of the prosecution to establish a sufficient motive for the crime and the absence of any proof that the defendant knew the candy which she gave Miss Dool contained strychnine. It was too much for any of the jurors to believe that Miss Dunlap would seek the life of another young woman for the sake of a clerkship in Felix's dry goods store, which would pay her but $5 a week.

Facts in the Case.

Alice Dool died on Aug. 7, 1902, and her death was found to have been When the verdict was read there caused by eating poisoned candy. Sus-was no demonstration by the audience. Miss Dunlap's pale face lighted up with a smile for the first time since her trial began. Her aged mother leaned over and kissed her, tears streaming down her withered cheeks. The three attorneys of the defense looked at each other and smiled, and a moment later they were shaking Miss Dunlap's proffered hand.

"The jury is discharged," said Judge Ramsey, without adding the customary words of compliment to a jury that has finished a long and arduous case. Without delay the court also ordered the discharge of Miss Dunlap from the custody of the sheriff.

While this was being done Miss Dunlap was thanking each of the turors in turn for their verdict. Her mother followed her example, and there was a striking comparison between the demeanor of the two women. Mrs. Dunlap's usually pallid face was flushed with the emotion she felt. and she allowed her tears to flow unrestrained. Her daughter was the picture of self-possession. She went calmly from one juror to another expressing her gratefulness in a low tone and conducting herself much as if she was at a church social.

"I have never doubted at any time that I would be acquitted," said Miss Dunian after she left the courtroom. "I knew that I was innocent and believed in my heart I would be found innocent. Of course, I have passed through a terrible strain, but I have always felt that everything would come out all right in the end. I can't her close friend, Tona Dunian, and considerable circumstantial evidence was worked up against her. She was discharged at the preliminary hearing before a justice of the peace, but the state's attorney collected sufficient evidence to secure her indictment by the grand jury. According to the story that was told at the time by Miss Dunlap she and Miss Dool visited two drug stores in the town and purchased chocolates at both places.

At the store of F. A. Miner the candy was kept in wooden buckets on the counter. Miss Dool complained of the bitterness in the candy when Miss Dunlap gave it to her.

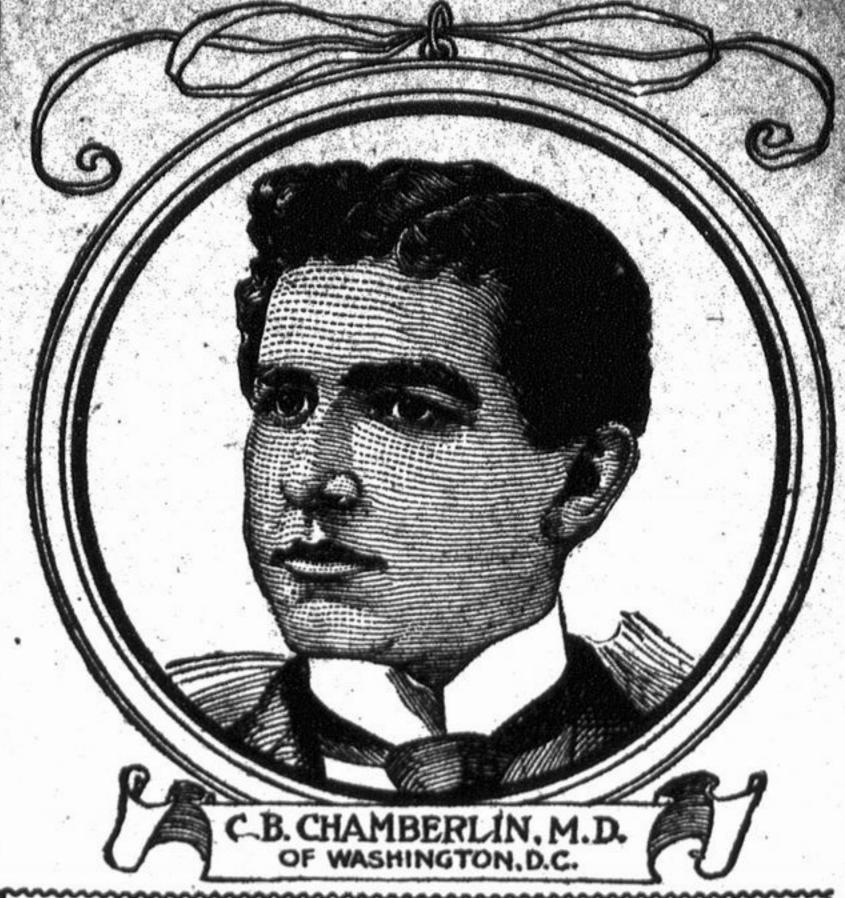

Miss Dunlap agreed that it tasted queerly when the complaint was made by her friend. A few moments after eating the candy Miss Dool became violently ill and told the drug clerk that she thought it was his candy that had caused her illness. One piece from which she had taken bite was secured by the clerk, and upon analysis a large percentage of poison was revealed.

It was some days after Miss Dool died before suspicion was directed against Miss Dunlap, as no motive for the crime was known to exist.

The defendant was substantiated in her story by Miss Miller, a school teacher. Subsequent investigation proved that Miss Dunlap had pur chased 5 cents' worth of strychnine on two occasions shortly before the polsoning of Miss Dool. These purchases she explained by saying that she used the drag for a corn remedy. In this she was upheld by her mother.
