INCREASED COST.

Expense of Publishing Newspapers Greatly Increased

Like everything else, the cost making a newspaper has increased. dozen or so years ago the getting out of a paper was comparatively inexpensive. Help was cheap, paper stock was low, and less reading matter was required. To-day printers get 60 per cent more in wages than they go twelve years ago and another increase in to go into effect September 1. The price of paper stock has risen fully a third and is still rising.

The introduction of the linotype into newspaper offices was felt to be the downfall of compositors, but time has shown that there are more men and women at work to-day on newspapers than ever before. The reason is that newspapers give more for the money than formerly; give more reading and a larger and better paper in every way than was the case in former years.

There is nothing on the market that people get so much of for their money as they do in newspapers at the present time. It is rich in news, full of entertainment, indeed, a necessity for the counting room, the store and the

With this increase in the cost of reparing and getting out papers will certainly come increased rates of advertising for the merchants, for there as nothing else left for the papers to da Lowell (Mass.) Telegram.
