

The Busy Married Man. When a man is safely married, You would like as not suppose That his troubles being over,

He has entered on repose. But just then be hears his lovee, lovee Murnur questions such as these: "Is my back hair flying, dearie? Will you put my combs in, please?"

Maybe he is in a hurry. Rushing out to catch a train. When he's stopped by some one calling, In a voice that's full of pain,

Notwithstanding he is flying, In the hottest kind of haste. "Will you kindly wait a minute, Dear, and button up my waist?"

Sometimes when he takes her walking, Spick and span, and quite at ease, In his newest suit and necktie. Feeling happy as you please, Stopping on a dusty crossing. Where the breeze is busy, too.

Often when his thoughts are busy. From his brilliant get-rich dream He is rather rudely awakened With a great and dazzling scheme, By his wife, who stands before him In a sad and soulful pose.

She comes at him in this manner :

"Won't you kindly tie my shoe?"

Saying, "Tell me, tell me truly. In there powder on my nose?" -Nashville American.
