ARMADILLO AS A FIGHTER

Marvelous Story of a Hunter's Adventure Sear Onkland, Cal. Some curious stories of the wild and woodly west have been sent to eastern newspapers, but the following dispatch from Oakland to the Ruffalo Times easily surpasses all others in the riot ous imagination of the writer, who has sent one of the most timid of animals out on the warpath against a hunter Even those who are familiar with the armadillo in his native wilds are not apt to give him credit for his fight ing abilities. While nature has pro rided him with a defensive armor which is a protection against most of his enemies, instances of his attacking man, even in self-defense, are extreme The experience of Fred Petmecky on a recent lumting trip proved that an armadillo can and will fight when able to choose its battleground, and its method of attack is unique and terrible. While riding toward camp one evening Mr. Petmecky heard a hound baying low paper headline this matter as 'An m a thicket. Knowing the dog was aware it was unlawful for it to run deer and not expecting to find anything more dangerous than a wampus or : gruffini, he left his rifle in the scalbard and went to investigate. He found the hound baying at a ruge armadillo.

which he seemed afraid to attack. On seeing its new enemy the armadillo rapidly prepared for action. Making a noise like a lion, it stezed a small sapling in its mouth and looped its tail around another. Then, by contracting its body, it bent the sapling held by its mouth as far as it was able. Having thus transformed itself into a catapult, it released its hold and was hurled with terrific force. Doubling itself into a ball as it flew through the air, it struck Mr. Permecky on the shoulder, knocking him down. Nearly stunned by the force of the blow and the fall, the hunter staggered to his feet just as the armadillo was ready for a second attack, which it made with like results.

The hound, which had seemed to be surprised and too terrified to take any part in the strange battle, now recov-
