NEAK EYES GET STRONG

Wrong eyes cannot be righted unless one KNOWS WHY they are wrong, and picking out glasses by guesswork is poor business. Correct-ing weak eyes is more than one man's work; the oculist must learn the cause of the trouble by examination, and the optician must execute the remedy,—namely proper glasses. * "ONE OF THEM KINGS."

Rear Admiral Samuel R. Franklin, who died a few' months ago, wrote an interesting book on the "Mem ories of a Rear Admiral." In it he gives the origin of a story famous in both the United States and the British navies. Admiral Franklin was at one time commander of the Franklin. The story is as follows:

The King of Naples and his suite once visited a foreign man-of-war as it lay anchored in the bay. One of his suite, taking a wind-sall, which conveyed air through the hatchway to the lower deck, to be a substantial pillar, leaned against it, and fell through the hatchway, and broke his

The officer of the deck did not see what had occurred. An old shellback quartermaster rushed up to him and repeatedly touched his cap without rereving any recognition. At last the old fellow could stand it no longer and shouted: "Please, sir, one of them kings has fallen down the hatchway!"

Now for the origin of the story. When the Franklin was lying, years pfierward, in the Bay of Naples, her commander lunched with a retired British admiral, who said to Admiral Franklin

"Do you know that the ship you command is the one on which the sters of 'one of them kings' originatcl' was a midshipman at the time. on a British ship, and our surgeon was sent to assist the surgeon of the Franklin to set the leg which was broket."

The Confessions of a Fakir.

By James Andrews.

"Look wise," he said. "Hand 'em a line of hot talk full o' big words. They'll fall easy.'

The machine has been seen by millions of Americans and trusted implicitly by hundreds of thousands. It is to be found at nearly every seaside and mountain resort in the country. What met the eye of the victim was a swarthy, hollow, bodyless head of papier-mache, mounted on a tall tube that sprang from a pedestal. The head was wrapped in a turban, and the dreamy eyes peered afar into the future over a scrubby plantation of black Oriental beard. That head was my familiar, and I was Abdul Aziz Khan. Had I, too, been of swarthy and Oriental appearance, that fact might have been some pallation of the folly of the gabies who flocked around the cheat. But, far from suggesting the mysterious East, I am a blond, blue-eyed, thin, nervous American, impossible to be ing the living albumen of the skin. mistaken for a citizen of any land east of Cape Cod. The First of Living Irishmen.

By Sydney Brooks.

T is twenty years since Sir Horace Plunkett entered Irish public life. He entered it with all the advantages of a fresh eye and mind and a keen, untrammelled outlook acquired by years of ranching and roughing it on the Western American plains. In political opinion he leaned to the Unionist side, but he quickly saw that the Irish problem was only incidentally one of politics or of "race" or of religion, and that at bottom it was a human prob-

To do this what was needed was a positive Irish policy, springing from the people and depend senic and mercury being examples; ent for its success upon their own powers of application and energy. The form such a policy should take was prescribed by that characteristic of the Irish people which Sir Horace was the first both to appreciate and to utilize-their clannishness, their faculty for acting in common. Nature's Stamp of Approval Is Sugar

By Dr. Woods Hutchinson.

IV do we always couple "sweetness and light" - with sweetness in the lead-as our highest conception of spiritual development Why is it that in all literatures and legends "sweet" is invariably associated with "sound," wholesome-the scent of flowers, the song of birds the golden sunlight-with everything that is pure and fresh and sound? Why is a sweetheart the most delightful form of cardiac motor that can be begged, borrowed, or stolen anywhere? Why don't we say "sour as a May morning," "alkaline" as the breath of kine, "bitter" as the nightingale's song, "nutritions" as the new-mown hay? Because deep down, instinctively, in the heart of us, we feel, no matter what the preachers or philosophers or the health journals may say that, to paraphrase Browning's defense of beauty,

If you get sweetness and naught else beside, You get about the best thing God invents.

Sweetness is to the taste what beauty is to the eye-nature's stamp of approval and certificate of wholesomeness. It is one of the most universal flavors of foodstuffs known. Over one-half of our rea, foods taste sweet or sweetishthat is, they contain sugar in some form. -Success,

The Rurales of Mexico compare favorably in bravery and reckless daring with that wonderful organization, the Northwest Mounted Police of Canada, and are by far the best armed force in Mexico. Their calling gives them opportunity for wild adventure, and thus satisfies the craving for a life of danger, which led many of them to be brigands in the first instance. They are a free and easy lot, quite in contrast to the peaceably-inclined policemen of the towns, and the slow-moving, indolent soldiery of the regular army.- From "Beyond the Mexican Sierras," in The Outing Magazine.

Drugs Which Hurt the Skin.

Alum is largely used as an astringent in cheap tollet lotious to lessen wrinkling. It acts poorly, and, in so far as it acts at all it is by coagulat Alum in this way kills whatever depth of skin it reaches.

Taunic acid, also so used, is equally away, and so more of the lotion is used. In the course of time the drugs get down more deeply into the skin, withered, yellowish, horny appearance.

All the world knows that strong household soaps make the skin coarse and red. But every one does not know that this is because such soaps contain free alkali, either caustic soda or caustic potash, drugs that destroy the skin chemically, uniting with its essentials just as they unite with the essentials of dirt on the boards.

The best toilet soaps have no free alkali; but not even the purest soap should be allowed to remain on the skin, for it is productive of injury. lem, a problem of the Irish mind and character. He admitted altogether-no The proper way to employ a soap is to

The real truth is that the beneficent or harmful action of a drug does not depend on its origin, does not depend even on its being in itself innocent or polsonous, but is determined by the dose and the frequency of the dose, and the action of the drug on the disease for which it is given.

The Gouty Habit.

Some physicians deny that there is such a condition as lithemia or the "uric acid diathesis," which means an abnormal tendency to the formation of lithic or uric acid-the two words are synonymous-in the body; but what ever they may choose to call it, there surely is a certain habit of body, a mander; E. W. Farrar, Officer of the Day; sort of cousin to gout, although in Q. B. Heartt, Quartermaster. several ways it differs from that

There are a number of widely varytion is out of order. In America it is much more common than gout itself. gouty relatives, and in a large majority of the cases they are people who drink too much malt or spirituous liquor and eat too much rich food and who take too little exercise.

The symptoms of uric acid poison ing are many and varied. Different forms of indigestion are common, especially that form called by the sufferers "billousness." There may be headache, neuralgia, cramps, and in severe cases, thickening of the arterial walls, causing palpitation and other troubles.

The treatment of uric acid excess and of gout are much alike, because both conditions are caused by an excess of something in the system which must be prevented from forming if possible, which is of course the better way, or must be got rid of if already

The treatment so strongly advocated by Dr. Alexander Haig, the great English authority on this subject, is largely negative. He says is you do not take any uric acid into the body you will not have to suffer from it, and you will not be put to the bother of getting rid of it. Most persons might be inclined to complain that his list of the forbidden is discouragingly long. and his proposed dietary somewhat strenuous, but it had better be accepted that extreme sufferers from uric acid troubles must lead a careful life as to diet if they would obtain relief. For ordinary cases there are three rules which should be strictly kept: live very temperately, eat with great moderation, take no alcohol whatever. The skin should be kept active by bathing and abundant friction, and the more exercise in the open air the better. For persons obliged to live a sedentary life, this matter of open-air exercise is a vital one if they would keep their uric acid down to a bearable point.-Youth's Companion.
