FILM STORY

AT THE MOTIOGRAPH.

MASTER AND PUPIL.

The favorite pupil of an artist be comes incensed at his master's criticism of his work, and breaking away from him and from his daughter, to whom he is engaged, starts out to make a living for himself by means of his art. The little girl grieves for him, his work is refused by publishers, and eventually an attic room and a crust of bread are all that keep him alive. Then an opportunity comes to make original drawings for a fine edition of Dickens' works, but his in experience and illness overcome him, and when his master, who cannot bear to see the little daughter grieve, climbs the garret stairs he finds the young men in a stupor upon the bed from exhaustion and the crude sketches upon the table. Out of the goodness of his heart the master toils through the long night, completes the work and leaves upon the table a set of original drawings which are perfect. And when in the morning the publisher's clerk comes, though he finds the young artist ill in bed, he finds the sketches done and takes them with him to the publisher. The young man not understanding why his work has been accepted, manages to crawl to the table and there finds a telltale cigar which his master had left by accident. In spite of his weakness, he stumbles down the stairs and to the publisher's office. There all his suspicions are verified; he sees his master's work. He runs to the studio of the old man, throws himself upon his knees before him, asking forgiveness. Of course forgiveness is forthcoming, and of course the little

Besides the story and the splendid acting, the film gives an opportunity for Mr. Furniss to do some of his remarkable drawings before the eyes of the spectator, and a number of his splendid pen pictures of Dickens' famous characters are shown in this

RICH GIRL TOILS FOR POOR 14 HOURS A DAY

Putting aside the pleasures of life that ordinarily interest the daughter

Miss Audrey Mae Conklin, daughter of E. R. Conklin of Aurora, Ill., has taken up active work in the service of the United Charities of Chicago and daily occupies a desk at the North Side

Graduate of Vaschampion jumper of the college, star member of the Vassar hockey team, and an enthusiastic Nimrod, Miss Conklin has taken up work among the poor of Chicago because she likes it.

Four hours every day are spen aboard trains, coming to and from Chicago. Ten hours more are spent either bending over her desk in clerical work or visiting the poor and distressed in the North Side district.

Asked how long she intended to devote herself to the work, she said: "For years, I hope."

Miss Conklin is the girl who applied for a hunter's license last November at Aurora and was at first refused on the ground that such a license could not be issued to a woman.

Though teased unmercifully by her friends, she persisted, obtained the license, and celebrated her victory by bagging eight rabbits, three prairie chickens and seven quall in her first days' hunt.

she was asked.

"Because I think it gives a woman a broader chance to make a mark for herself in the world than anything else I know of. You see, I always have been a very energetic person, and I think that because a young girl happens to be the daughter of a rich man her duty to the world does not end in having a good time and enjoying herself. She should be independent and incidentally do all the good she possi-

"Yes, I am getting a small compensation for the work I am doing here, but it just about pays my car fare and lunch, and that's all."

"Aren't your hours very long and don't you find the long journey from Aurora every day very tedious?"

"Yes. I have to admit that four hours in the train added to a full ten hours' work is rather hard on one, but then I just love the work, you see. and that makes all the difference, and there are plenty more girls who are equally as fortunate as I who are engaged in this very same work.

"If you really want to know the principal reason why I am doing my mite toward helping the poor it can be summed up in three words, and athletics because I liked them. I went in for broad and high jumping at school, took up horse riding, hockey playing and hunting, all for the same reason."

"How long do you intend to keep up

"For years, I hope, and at the end of it all, if my present plans are ity work as I find it in Chicago.

"Marriage interfere with my work? should say not. Quite the reverse. My work may interfere with marriage," she laughed.

"Now, you really must excuse me. as I have several poor people to visit this afternoon and I am sure I can do more good going to see them than 1 can talking to you for publication. which, please understand, I don't

SUMMER VISITING.

One of the most marked social changes of the present day is the decline of hospitality.

Your mother will tell you that when she and dad got a week off, they would journey over into the next state and camp down on their cousins, fre quently without sending them any

And the cousins were gald to se them too. The "spare room" was al ready. It did not cost much to live in those days. The provision for the table was lavish anyway. No more food was cooked, and about the only change was that there were more dishes to wash. Probably mother took hold and helped wipe them, so it was even up.

At the present time the housewife is flustered if a new friend descends on her for over night. For the standards of life have advanced. The guest room must be swept, the bedding "Why did you take up this work?" freshened, ice cream must be ordered, more substantial provender must be provided, and the servant, if one is Success Depends on Individual Char kept, must be cajoled and coaxed.

In many families it is customary to write friends that they could be at liberty for a week-end visit on such a date, and to suggest with elaborate and tactful diplomacy that an invitation could be accepted at that time.

But the housewife feels so keenly the burden of our high standards of home upkeep, that she often hesi tates to do this. Visits are reduced to carefully arranged swaps of give and take. If your cousins have not been to see you for a year, you do not feel that you can invite yourself to their home for another twelve-

What is the result?

This is a day when friends are scat tered from the Aroostook to San Diego. Families have drifted to the four winds of heaven. Unless one takes pains to keep up the old inti macies, which are always closer than the new, the best friendships of our life are falling into decay.

A JONAH FOR C. B. & Q.

Monday evening seemed to be a Jonah time for the Burlington. At about 6 o'clock the Mendota passenger blew out an air pipe on the Front realized, I will write a book on char street crossing. They were unable to set the brakes, and after failing to repair the break for some time orders were received to proceed to Aurora slowly.

The 6:04 was held up at the "W" block and some of the passengers, impatient at the delay, started to walk into Naperville. The 6:42 came along on the south track and took on the passengers from the delayed train and brought them to Naperville and passed the walkers before they reached Naperville.

The next trouble came when the 7:39 struck a down electric light wire, OVER FATHER'S BIOGRAPHY at the Front street crossing, and broke it. Sparks flew and sputtered as the wire end came in contact with the wheels. The accident left a hanging live wire north of the tracks and near the lounge factory and cut off dictionary. part of the commercial lights.

This combination of events caused the trains to be late into Naperville Sir all evening.-Naperville Clarion.

STRUCK BY TRAIN.

A man whose identity could not be positively established, but whose name is believed to have been Bernard Schultz, was struck by a train on the north "Y" leading from the "Q" tracks to the Indiana Harbor railway at La Grange. The accident occurred about ten o'clock Monday morning as the victim was walking on the tracks toward the Congress Park st tion. Johnson's ambulance was rushed to the scene, but the man was dead before medical aid could be given. At the inquest, held at Johnson's undertaking rooms, it developed that Schultz, as he was known to his fellow employes, had been sent out to Clarendon Hills Saturday night to work for the Burlington railroad, but for some unknown reason he did not report for work Monday morning .-Suburban News.

AMUSEMENTS.

The big scene in "The Littlest Rebel," the Dustin Farnum success, which begins an engagement of three weeks at McVicker's theater, Chicago, Saturday evening, Aug. 17, has to do with the visit of Captain Cary, the Confederate soldier, to his Virginia home. His once stately mansion is in ashes, his wife is dead, the one remaining servant is missing and his little daughter, the little rebel, is keeping a weary vigil for her parent, who crawls through the Union lines occasionally to bring her food. When he arrives in a sad plight, he finds the little one with her doll and taking her on his knee, teaches her to tell her first lie.

"Would General Lee want me to tell a lie?" she asks innocently.

"Yes, just this once. Sometime he will tell you so himself," replies her father, and she learns that she is to tell the Union officer who will enter the house shortly that her father was there, but has left by the road that goes past the blackberry bushes and the well. This she does when Colonel Morrison appears on the scene and orders her to open the door. Her father, in the meantime, has crawled into the loft of the shed that is his daughter's habitation. Diminutiv Mary Miles Minter as "Virgie," the lit tle rebel, will linger long in the memory of theatergoers, especially the ladies and children.

"The Littlest Rebel" is heartily rec ommended as one of the best and most convincing plays yet presented. Matinees will be given Wednesdays and Saturdays, with a special matinee Labor Day.

YOUTH IN COLLEGE.

acter Exemplified in "Putting It Over," Olympic, Chicago.

Survival of the fittest in college education is proven in "Putting It Over," the college comedy now playing to big audiences at the Olympic theater, Chicago. Lee Arthur and Frank Hatch, the authors of the play, in an amusing way seek to show that after all it is the personal qualifications of each student which fit him in the proper groove of life.

It so transpires that James Bagby, who enters college with the avowed intention of becoming a minister, fails in his chosen calling and blossoms out as a sporting editor of a live daily. Launcelot Jones, the only youth to flunk in a class of forty-five, considered the biggest blockhead by his fellow students, develops into an ingenious banker with wealth enough to buy and sell his former college mates. Ivan Petroff, the brightest student in the school, finds himself in the employ of Bagby, in the capacity of chauffeur, a position magnanimously given him by his college chum in an hour of need. The thrilling love story which runs through "Putting It Over" deals with Ross Sterling, a law student, who forsakes his profession to play professional ball, to win the hand of Ruth Noel. No play presented this season contains more heart interest or comedy than this play.

Ordeal for Brides.

A peculiar and barbaric marriage custom of the Kabyle women of Africa consists in the martyrdom of the bride, who, clad in her wedding finery, stands through an entire morning against a pillar in the village square. Her eyes are closed, her arms pressed to her sides and she has only the narrow base of the column for a foothold. Meanwhile a ring of villagers criticise and commend on her appearance.

Had Johnson Stumped.

Doctor Johnson and Macklin were arguing a literary question, when the former quoted Greek. "I don't understand Greek," said Macklin, "The man who presumes to argue literature ing aye. should understand every language," replied Johnson, severely. Whereupon Macklin began reeling off a string of Gaelic, and for once Johnson had nothing to say.

Some Best to Be Forgotten,

"I think," said the young statesman, "that some of my speeches will be recalled with interest in years to come." "They will," replied Senator Sorghum, "unless you are exceptionally lucky."

Useless Embellishment. A lazy man has about the same opinion of efficiency that an octogenarian has of a ribbon on a cane.

Strange. It is strange that so many men make fools of themselves when there are so many others who desire to do the job for them.

I had dull, heavy pains in my loins and there was weakness extending from my hips downward. The least exertion tired me and I often had to sit down and rest. The kidney secretions also caused much annoyance and plainly showed that I had kidney complaint.
