Important in the North. After Twenty Years. Young Stewart, a free trader, defying the laws of the trading company, is captured by the Factor's Indians and condemned to make the journey of death, as did his father. The Factor's daughter, Virginia, meets and falls in love with Ned Stewart, and promises to aid him. The journey of death consists of a man being compelled to walk across the bleak, barren, snow-covered plains, five hundred miles to civilization, without food or arms. Young Ned, a stalwart, lion-hearted son of the forest, conspires with Picard, procures a rifle with which to secure food while on the journey of death, but the rifle is taken away from him, and he is sent on the horrible trip. Virginia's pleadings are of no avail. Rand, who originally caused the breach between Albert and Stewart's father, witnesses Picard's giving the rifle to Stewart and tells Picard's sweetheart, Julie, that unless she throws Picard over and becomes his wife, he will tell the Factor of Picard's traitorously aiding the condemned Stewart. Julie, at an opportune moment, shoots and fatally injures Rand, who confesses with his dying breath to having wrongfully injured Graham Stewart. The Factor relents and sends a rescue party for young Stewart, but that stalwart young man has reached civilization. Realizing that Virginia loves Stewart, the Factor sends her to meet him, and the brave woodsman begins life anew with his bride from the wilds. Note: A Factor at a trading post is the chief officer and more powerful than the Czar in his own domain.

HOME DEPARTMENT PICNIC The Home Department picnic at Mrs. Prince's home on Oakwood avenue on Thursday was a great success, although the rain and clouds of the early morning kept a number of people at home who had planned to go. This is an annual affair and with the picnic dinner served on the lawn, Dr. Millie Graves' thoughtful and interesting talk on Modern Therapeutics and the cordial atmosphere among the guests, it was a day long to be remembered. Dr. Graves, who has a large practice in La Grange, occupies the Geaner house on Vincennes avenue and has been a resident of our village for more than a year. Her address was listened to with deep interest and many questions were asked in regard to the modern methods in use at present. The address is printed in full in another column.
