CHURCH CHARLEY RAY DOESN'T OBJECT TO PLAYING

Triangle Star, Who Made Big Name for Himself in "The Coward" and "Peggy," Says Such Parts Have Fine Possibilities.

Ince juvenile, declares he doesn't think he ever will get tired of playing "weakling" parts. For more than two years he has been almost totally confined to Colville, of this village, and Miss Ida such characterizations, with the result that he has thoroughly awakened, he says, to their utter superiority, from a dramatic standpoint, over "straight"

The first really big success attained by Ray was in the part of Frank Winslow in "The Coward," the Civil war drama, which was Thomas H. Ince's second contribution to the Triangle program. This established him so securely as an actor of merit that Ince decided to continue him in parts of similar calibre. The role of Colin Cameron, the sinning youth in Billie Burke's "Peggy," was his next appearance, and this was so powerfully interpreted that the young actor was elevated to stardom. He was presented as co-star with William H. Thompson in "The Dividend," in which ne played the n'er-do-well son of the veteran. Next he was seen as star in the title role of "The Deserter," which itself implies the nature of the part, and then as co-star with Louise Glaum in "The Wolf Woman." His latest performance is that of Rodney Castleton in "Honor Thy Name!" in which he is co-starred with Frank Keenan. And this, too, is a "weakling" part. It is that of a Southern youth who, while attending college in the North, allows himself to become enmeshed in the net of a para site, and thereby compels a dramatic demonstration of injured pride on the part of his stern and unyielding father "It looks as though I'll be playing weaklings' until I'm too old for the ob." says Ray. "but I'm content with my lot. I have found that they afford me far greater chances."

THE REPORTER

From the issue of January 18, 1895: On last Saturday evening the Down ers Grove Club tendered a congratulatory reception to its president, Mr Guy L. Bush and bride, who have only recently returned from their bridal tour through the east and south. The reception feature of the evening was followed by informal dancing until ten o'clock, when a very dainty lunch was served, after which the remainder of the evening was very enjoyably spent in dancing the graceful, some times intricate, but always beautiful figures of the German, led with ability by Mr. Chas. P. Stivers. * * *

SCHOOL NOTES.

It is worthy of notice that those pupils who live two, three, four and more miles from the school house are never late. It would be little short of a curiosity to see the Andrus boys, Frank Briggs, Mable Hatch or the Wheeler children come to school

Miss Doris Fraenkel, of the class of '94, very creditably passed the teachers' examination for Chicago not long ago. When it is remembered that only a small percentage of the applicants proved successful. Miss Fraenkel's teachers and schoolmates may feel justly proue of our Dorls.
