Director General Albert Capellani employed 450 extra people in evening clothes to represent a New Year's eve celebration in a popular Broadway restaurant. The setting was an exact replica of a famous lobster place and covered the entire studio floor. Two orchestras furnished the music and as a final touch of realism twelve cases of champagne were provided.

Editor Reporter: Some time ago a plea to "spare the birds" was made through the columns of the Reporter to the young sapheads who consider it sportsmanlike to shoot the wild birds which make this section their home. The plea should have been made with a club instead of in the form of a polite and gentle request. The young pirates continue and exult in their barbarous and de structive work and may be seen al most any day after school hours outside of the corporation limits shoot ing robins, bluejays and meadow larks. Any one deliberately destroy ing these helpless little creatures in positively devoid of all sentiment and manhood. Consequently, an appeal to them through either of these instincts is in vain. Another pest with which every law-abiding community cursed is the young fellows who travel in "bunches" and wantonly destroy property. There is not space here to enumerate all the acts of vandalism. but here is a sample: A "bunch' standing on the corner of Chicago avenue and Main street, with hatchet and golf clubs, deliberately backed at a large shade tree until they succeeded in ripping off a piece of bark about five feet long, practi cally destroying the tree. Ancient Egyptians, Greeks and Romans Knew Something About the Value of Publicity.

Advertising was well known in the palmy days of Egypt. Of course, they didn't have the electric signs blazing across the sky, they didn't know that red makes the best color for advertising, green the second and black the next, but they did understand the first principles and applied them in daily life, says the Detroit Free Press. Perhaps the first bit of advertising copy was the "lost, strayed or stolen" advertisement written by an Egyptian on a slip of papyrus when his favorite

The Greeks had even greater skill. They advertised their concerts, musical affairs, plays and contests. They gave us the idea of using bands to attract a crowd, for they sent around their cities a town crier, accompanied by a musician playing a harp or a lyre. He one ago the W. C. T. Booth Tarkington's Celebrated Nove Meets With Excellent Treatment in Adaptation by Famous Players Film Co.

There are at least three people besides Booth Tarkington who have done much toward making this production a success. These are Harvey Thew, whose exceedingly clever adaptation of the novel has been used; Robert G. Vignola, director, who has lost no trick in exploiting the comedy possibilities of the story, and Jack Pickford, whose impersonation added to the effectiveness of the fest of the young hopeful of seventeen is inimitable. Louise Huff in the feminine lead is also pleasing, prettily dressed and dainty.

Henry James' Adverbs.

Stevenson spotted the unconscionable repetition of certain adjectives in "Roderick Hudson," but probably the most marked characteristic of Henry James' style is his passion for adverbial clauses. He is the most adverbtal of English writers; you will find more adverbs to the page than even in Meredith. And he had a quaint habit of putting the adjective before the verb, when most writers would put it after. One of his ladies (for examples are taken at in the list. So far as we know it is random) "thankfully felt," unother "quite beautifully and tenderly smiled." And "after all" crops up all over the place. But one would not have these things altered; they were part of the man. One does object to them, however, in his imitators, who have learned the trick but missed the spirit behind it .- London Chronicle,
