BREEDING DOGS WITH WOLVES

Darwin's Belief Was That Domestic Canines Represent Several Races of the Wild Animal.

In "The Origin of the Species" Darwin expressed the opinion that the dog was originally descended from the wolf. He was inclined to think that in different parts of the globe man had tamed the particular species of wolf which would be found there, and that our domestic dogs, therefore, represent not one but several races of the wild animal, writes R. B. Townsend in the Westminster Gazette. It has long been known that dog and wolf will interbreed freely. Buffon, for example, tells us that he made such a cross successfully. Indeed, in Russia the Tatars long kept up a fierce pack of hounds for wolf hunting in which a strong strain of wolf was evident. Unfortunately, a few years ago the little daughter of a huntsman, crossing their kennel alone, stumbled and fell, and the savage brutes set upon her and devoured her on the spot. The indignant tsar had the whole pack destroyed.

Even in England the cross with the wolf has been resorted to for other hounds in order to increase the courage and strength of jaw of the dogs. But as the first cross proved rather too wild and uncertain in temper for safe handling, the masters of other hounds have always crossed back again and again to the dog till there remained perhaps only one sixteenth of wolf blood, or even less.

This fact establishes the fertility of the hybrid between the wolf and the dog when bred back to one of the original parents, but so far there has been no evidence to show how far the hybrids would be fertile when bred together continuously. Recently, however, in the present century, this has been tested by Dr. Alarie Behm of the Stockholm zoological gardens, who has given a brief account of the results obtained by him.

DOWNERS GROVE HOME GUARD GETS MEN AND MONEY

then took the stand and in auctioneer style raised a few hundred dollars more making the grand total of the afternoon $1,200 of the $3,500 asked.

As each new amount was announced it was greeted with applause and cheers. The boys already uniformed especially showing their appreciation of the generous response of men and money.

For a fitting final to the afternoon Lieut. Balcynski called for three cheers for Colonel Wilson and Major Hobbs who had given of their time to attend the meeting. These were given with a will. But for genuine noise, coming straight from the hearts of those present, the cheer for Lieut. Slusser, who presided and made a short talk, put any cheering ever heard here in the shade. Lieut. Slusser understood then, what was hard to say in words, just how his sacrifice in getting "into it" was understood and appreciated by his fellow townsmen. In the cheering, neither Lieut. Balcynski nor the new recruits were forgotten. Here the members of Company H, who understood what it meant to them to have a real leader and new men in the ranks, almost raised the roof.

We are proud of Downers Grove and its people, more proud than we have words to say. The well known Downers Grove spirit displayed at the Curtis Theatre Sunday has been shown in everything pertaining to the war. In men, money and moral support Downers Grove stands right behind President Wilson and the Government and there is where we will stand until the war is won for democracy.

Writing as one of the "home guard" who was among the first to sign up and was in a position to see the lack of attention it was getting from the general public, I wish to express the general feelings of the boys in the company. They were pleased beyond expression at the results attained Sunday. The older men who have joined especially, they welcome, for they are making the greatest sacrifice of time and inclination. And as for the money, say, were we glad to get it? As Mae Tinee says, "Ask Me, Ask Me."

Contributions to the Company H fund are still being accepted and should be paid to Treasurer Hubert Jones. Recruits? You bet! Come to drill at the library next Sunday afternoon at 2:30 and sign up.

Allegation is Denied.

The familiar charge that artists who illustrate stories pay no attention to the text they illustrate is grossly untrue, declares the Kansas City Star. We know a young author who writes a story in which a man with long whiskers got wound up in an electric fan. The illustrator might have ignored the fan altogether, but he didn't. The only detail he omitted was the whiskers, and the picture of the man with a smooth face tangled up in the fan was declared a masterpiece by the artist's family.

Hands and Fingers.

Nearly everything of money value in this world gets its worth from the human touch, according to Industrial Management magazine. The Middle hand of humanity turns whatever it fingers into its representative weight in gold. Diamonds gain their high value not only from rarity but because tons of the earth's soil have to be handled to find one little stone. Gold itself gets its worth not merely from scarcity but from the immense work in accumulating one ounce.

Value of Forests.

It has been estimated that if the forests of the earth were completely stocked and scientifically worked they would yield annually the full equivalent to 120 times the present consumption of coal.
