There is one special day which we know by that name, The Epiphany, being the twelfth day after Christmas: and as we see in the Prayer Book, the particular manifestation there commemorated is that of Jesus Christ to the Gentiles in the persons of the Eastern Magi, or wise men, who came as the star led them to Jerusalem, that they might worship Him that was born King of the Jews.

Dust.

Dust, by its own nature, can rise only so far above the road; and birds which fly higher never have it upon their wings.—Henry Ward Beecher.

TWENTY-TWO YEARS AGO IN THE REPORTER

The German Evangelical Society, who for some time past have been holding services in the Congregational Church, voted last Sunday to build an edifice for themselves in the near future. Tuesday the society was incorporated and the following trustees were elected: Henry Selig, F. Schindler, F. Binder, Louis Klein, Geo. Heintz and John Woelfersheim. A building committee consisting of G. H. Bunge, F. Schindler and John Woelfersheim was appointed to negotiate for a suitable site.

Miss Lou Stanley returned from a month's visit in Columbus, Neb., last Friday morning accompanied by her cousin, Mrs. Adah Anderson.

D. K. Foote, as has been his custom for several years, entertained the Congregational, Baptist and Methodist ministers, with their wives, at dinner on New Year's Day.

Grove Lodge, A. F. & A. M. held its regular election, Wednesday evening, December 23d. Those who will fill the offices for the next term are: Worshipful Master, Charles Mochel. Senior Warden, F. F. Chessman. Junior Warden, W. F. Canada. Treasurer, Frank Blanchard. Secretary, Bert C. White. Senior Deacon, A. P. Hosmer. Senior Steward, George Downer. Junior Steward, J. H. Griffiths. Chaplain, M. Slusser. Marshal, T. S. Rogers. Tyler, Wm. J. Beidelman.

W. H. Smart's little five year old daughter, Ada, experienced a painful accident last Thursday evening. She fell while playing in the house and in some way struck her elbow against the door, fracturing the bone near the joint. Dr. Tope was hastily called and the arm was set. She was doing nicely at last report.

A RAILROAD JOKE

The railroad boys tell a good story on Al. Burt of the Burlington: The time was Christmas day; the place East Grove; the characters three. Al. Burt was the hero, a fat girl the heroine, and a big clothes basket the villain. The woman of much avoirdupois was tardy in getting off the train, and just as she reached the lower step the train pulled out. She gave one scream, pushed the basket, shut her eyes and jumped. Our hero flew to the girl's rescue, but somehow the stage machinery bungled and the basket caught Al. in that portion of his anatomy known as the bread receptacle and he sat down in the ditch to think it over. But the heroine, where was she? On top of the basket, of course. It was very, very funny, and his brother trainmen laughed in fiendish glee. The train in the meantime, had sped on towards Downers Grove and upon its arrival there came the sad intelligence that Al. was missing. A rescuing party was at once organized, but just as they started out a light waved frantically was seen down the track and in a few minutes our own Al., the pride of Millington and the hero of a thousand battles with mosquitoes in the bushes along Fox river, came tearing into town as the pursued by ten thousand Comanche Indians in full war paint.

Sleep Over It.

Here is a suggestion that may save you life-long remorse: When you have an important decision to make, sleep over it. I don't mean that when you meet a bear on a narrow trail you should take a nap before you decide whether to advance or retreat. You know what I mean.—Los Angeles Times.

Put Hard Things First.

The person who puts the disagreeable duty first in order is the one who is pretty sure to succeed. The impulse which leads us to postpone anything hard and unpleasant as long as we can is something which will prove our undoing, unless we are on our guard.

At Dicke Theatre, Tuesday, Jan. 7th.

Edward Andrews, a young man of retiring disposition, loves Frances Raymond, daughter of a wealthy business man who is interested in promoting a merger of chemical interests. Andrews is kindly and altogether too self-effacing. An opposite in type is Michael Rudder, a newspaper reporter, who has a roving disposition and who elects to follow "the gypsy trail" because of his nomadic instincts inherited from his Irish ancestors. Frances is romantically inclined, but conventional. When Andrews courts her, she tells him he lacks something and she causes her brother to read passages of "Lochinvar" to him. Andrews naturally gets the idea that she wants to be kidnapped and that he must steal her in order to win her. He arranges to kidnap Frances, provided Grandma agrees to act as chaperone. Canwhile, Rudder, sent by his city editor to get the facts of the chemical merger and the investigation leads him to the Raymond home.

Rudder finds a copy of the merger agreement on the veranda where it had been dropped by Raymond. Rudder changes his mind about the matter, and preferring to quit the newspaper to which he is attached rather than publish the information which he possesses, he resigns his position to escape being discharged. Raymond introduces him to Andrews, who offers to get him another job, but he declines the tender. Andrews asks Rudder to help him to kidnap Frances and when he sees her in an automobile, he consents to act as chauffeur. As he drives away with her, Andrews goes in quest of Grandma and enlists her aid in his scheme to win Frances.

After a reckless automobile drive, Rudder reaches the country home of Grandma who is waiting Andrews and he boldly carries Frances into the house. She thinks he loves her but he tells her he is merely the agent of another. She asks for Andrews and falls into Rudder's arms just as Andrews reaches the scene. Andrews is in despair. Frances tells Rudder that she intends to marry him for she has been hypnotized by his romantic talk. Suddenly Rudder realizes that marriage would remove him from his cherished gypsy trail and he makes a quick get away in the automobile. Frances is disconsolate at his disappearance and refuses to be consoled by Andrews, who offers to go search of Rudder and bring him back to her arms.

Frances confesses to her father that romance and adventure are distasteful to her and Andrews vainly seeks to make love to her. He finally goes in search of Rudder and finds him chumming with a band of gypsies. He induces him to return to Frances, but when she sees him, she suddenly conceives a violent love for Andrews. Hence when Rudder proposes to her with the announcement that he is the grandson of Lord Dromore and heir to a large fortune, she refuses him and falls into Andrews' arms. Andrews wonders how it all happens, but he nevertheless is satisfied with the situation as it is, confident that his patience has been suitably rewarded.

Lark Not an Early Riser.

Investigation has ruined the lark's reputation for early rising. That much-celebrated bird is quite a sluggard, as it does not rise till long after chaffinches, linnets and a number of hedge-row birds have been up and about.

Teach Child to Love Pictures.

A child's taste in pictures can be cultivated by having in his room pictures which are good both as to color and subject. Pictures dealing with nature in any form are always attractive to a child and if they are hung low in the room so that the child can even handle them if he wants to, this adds much to his enjoyment.

GREAT MASTER OF THOUGHT

Influence of Aristotle on the Minds of Men Has Been for Two Thousand Years Supreme.

Aristotle was the most famous and influential of the Greek philosophers. He was born 384 B. C. and died in 322 B. C. In the history of western civilization there is no example of any other philosopher having exercised so great and so permanent an influence on the minds of men as Aristotle. For nearly 2,000 years his authority was not only predominant, but almost despotic, in all countries where the light of learning had penetrated. During the "dark ages," when little attention was paid to learning, even in the most favored portions of Christian Europe, the philosophy of Aristotle was encouraged and his works diligently studied in the Moslem capitals of Bagdad and Cordova. On the revival of letters in Italy and other parts of Europe, Aristotle reigned for a time in the schools without a rival.

After the reformation his influence decreased, and for nearly 300 years after the time of Bacon the works of Aristotle were almost universally neglected among the learned in Europe. Toward the close of the last century, however, attention was again directed to them. His true position in the realm of intellect is admitted to be fully equal, if not superior, to that of any other of the great masters of thought that the world has ever seen.

Hopi Indians.

The first knowledge of the Hopi Indians by Europeans was in July of 1540, soon after Captain General Don Francisco Vasquez de Coronado had found the famed golden Seven Cities of Cibola in the poverty-stricken pueblos of Zuni. In the summer he sent westward an exploring party, headed by Don Pedro de Tovar.

Though the very name of the tribe, "Hopi," means "peaceful people," the Spanish chronicles of their land, known as the province of Tusayan, showed that of all southwestern Indians they have resisted encroachment most, and have, till very lately, generally refused the ministrations of Christian teachers. About the time of the Spaniards' coming they transferred their habitations to the mesa tops, whereon they now live in a half dozen villages to which the women pack water up steep and rocky trails.

ATTRACTIVE ONLY TO TOURIST

Eastern City of Rome Not a Place to Which Westerners Care to Make a Long Stay.

Monet, the modern Ninewells, is a picturesque but not altogether attractive city. The houses are built of irregular blocks of stone laid in thick mortar. They are usually colored with a white stucco, made by burning the local gypsum rock.

The roofs, of the same material as the walls, are usually flat, with a waist-high parapet, but are not infrequently domed. Doorways are often made of slabs of the easily carved gypsum.

The streets are narrow and simple, forming a mass of tangled lines. As there is no system of drainage whatever, they serve as repositories for all the filth of the houses that border on them. They are rarely wider than that more than two men can walk abreast.

As a result of the fine dust, the filth and the glare of the sun on the white walls, ophthalmitis and lung diseases abound. The flies, which breed in the open refuse heaps, is astonishing numbers, swarm over everything. They cause the button, common also in Aleppo and Bagdad, an ailment that resembles a carbuncle and persists for several months and leaves an ugly scar.

Opposite Monet, across the river, are the last vestiges of Ninewells, capital of the second of the world's great empires. In places, great walls of the ancient city, built of irregular masses of sun-dried brick, laid on a high broad wall of cut stone, are still traceable. The city was further protected by a moat into which the waters of a small river could be conducted. It was walled to a depth of 20 feet and a width of 60 yards, and, like the walls, is in evidence today.

NOT GOOD JUDGE OF POETRY

One Explanation for Napoleon's Peculiar Worship at Shrine of Second Rate Writer of Verses.

The curious partiality which Napoleon showed for the poems of Ossian, particularly "Tomara," passed his contemporaries, as it since has his biographers, says the Christian Science Monitor. It is related that he carried a beautifully bound copy of Ossian with him to Egypt, and that on being read passages of the Odyssey by the poet Arnauld, while on board ship, he contemptuously exclaimed: "You call that sublime! What a difference between your Homer and my Ossian!" and, reading some passages from "Tomara," he said: "This is grand, and sentimental and sublime! Ossian is a poet, Homer mere drivet." Napoleon's preference for the works of the nursery poet of the North continued throughout his life. He was reading Ossian in 1797, and a well-thumbed copy was among his books at St. Helena. There have been many explanations given for so strange a preference. The Countess de B... ion unkindly remarks that the Emperor was notoriously deficient in French and that which was not poetry in his own language was not poetry in the Emperor's.
